EPISTLE
TO THE READER.

If Arguments might induce Christians to Peace, it were enough to say, nothing is more expressly required than Christian Concord by our Lord Jesus, or more commended from its heavenly Original and happy Fruits; nor scarce any thing more warned against, as obstructing the Kingdom of Christ, advantageous to Satan's Interest, destructive to Religion, yea to Civil Society, and repugnant to the very Design and Spirit of the Gospel, as well as to the mutual Usefulness of men, than uncharitable and dividing Contentions be. The only reason that can be suggested to acquit such Contenders from notorious Guilt must be, that it is for the Faith of the Gospel that they contend. But it's worth our serious thoughts, that as even this cannot excuse a rigid, censorious, envenomed Spirit, or unballowed Epistle to the Reader.

Methods in our struggles for Truth; so no other than a direct Opposition to the Essentials of some fundamental Article can warrant Divisions, or refusals of Communion, on the account of mere difference in the Faith, provided no Assent to any real Error is imposed on us as a Term of Union.

It is too obvious to require Proof, that if a direct Opposition to what is not fundamental, or to whatever remotely belongs to that which is so; nay further, if opposing by denied Consequences what is of the Essence of any fundamental Article of Faith; be a warrant for Separation of Ministers and Churches from each other, then the instituted Rules of Christian Fellowship do not oblige us; the approved Instances of Communion in the New-Testament-Churches ought to be condemned; and all the Churches of Christ must daily be more and more rended by Non-communion and dividing Animosities, until the Catholick Church lose all show of Unity, or be reduced to a single Congregation, (and that but for an uncertain moment,) even when vast numbers of Christian Societies proclaim the advancement of our Saviour's conquest.

Nor is their Folly less apparent, who (for excuse of this) surmise, that every Error which they ought to rectify in themselves, and by just methods to reform in others, is a Bar to Communion; or yet, that Separation is one of those just methods in the case fore-remembered, especially towards such over whom they pretend to no Authority. Oh when will men see, that Christ's Royal Prerogative is assumed, whenever other Terms of, or Bars to Communion are invented, than what He hath expressly made such, and that in a matter wherein his own Honour and his People's Interest are concerned, next to that of Union with himself!

But alas! in contempt of Rules so necessary to the Churches Peace, many Ages are filled with Instances of assuming a right to account him for a Heathen, who differs but in Trifles, and cannot pronounce their very Phrases, tho' scrupled because abused to support an Error, and the Truth designed by them is most expressly owned: A thing so thwarting a Christian Temper, that Athanasius and Basil profess they would break with none who refused the word of Christ, so they would by any words declare their soundness in the Doctrine of the Trinity; and yet that word had been adjusted, not by a few particular Authors, but by the great Council of Nice, in opposition to the Heresy of Arius. I scruple not to say, an Antichristian Spirit most effectually extinguiseth the like Moderation; and such Impostors, intrusted with the Secular Sword, would use it as they do their Ecclesiastical, however they condemn Severity while themselves are not the Persecutors.

That there have been of late years great Divisions among the Dissenters, is too publicly known: And I had rather share in the Imputation of an Accessary, than perpetuate them by the fullest Vindication; hoping that a calm Season will better fit all of us to reflect, and repent of our Faultiness, especially the Unchristian management of our Debates; for which, we have great reason to pray, God would not signally contend hereafter.

But blessed be the Name of our God, that ere we be quite devoured by each other, a fit Occasion is mini...red for our healing; and tho' Self-preservation hath been my work ever since my temperate Confutation of Dr. Crisp, (and then too,) none will wonder I take hold of this Opportunity, to evidence that further Contests will be inexcurable. Nor is it a hard Province, when the united Ministers, and the Congregational Brethren, have so far acquitted themselves: The first, by sundry former Accounts (and now more enlarged, from any word in which I cannot suspect two will differ,) of their Vindication from Errors concerning the Satisfaction of Christ, and Justification, which are the only Points objected: The last, by their Declaration against Antinomian

tinomian Errors; for which I am too thankful, to remark its Stings; and had it come out before my Postscript, I durst not have represented their Judgment by the Consequences of their Objections, (however natural,) as in some few things is done. That the God of Peace would give us Peace, is the unfeigned Prayer of

Thy Servant in the Gospel, and Brother in the Kingdom and Patience of our Lord Jesus,

Daniel Williams.

Note. The Edition of the Works of Socinus, &c. to which I refer, is that printed in Folio, Irenopolis, 1656.
INTRODUCTION.

As the too visible Progress of Antinomianism grieved us, and obliged our Defence of the Truth, and a Gospel-Ministry; so we must rejoice in the Congregational Ministers Declaration against Antinomian Errors, well knowing the infected will more regard the Judgment of these Brethren, because of their Agreement with them in matters of Church-Discipline.

We are sorry they were not a little sooner prevailed with to give this Testimony; for then we had not been forced in the Answer to the Report, to hint some of the Reasons inducing us to think many of them espoused, and the generality of them in this City too much countenanced Antinomianism, with its open Abettors. Nor dare we indulge a Temper so devilish, as for Party-fake to repine at these Brethren acquitting themselves from those imputed Errors: But on the contrary, we gladly endeavour deavour to procure Peace by this Declaration of theirs; for which desirable end, we shall overlook all the Reflections contained therein against us; and not refuse to acquit ourselves once more from all hurtful Errors concerning Christ's Satisfaction, and our Justification, (altho' so fully and often done heretofore, that our Brethren's Indignation to the contrary doth not a little surprize us;) and, which is principally aimed at, we hope it will appear, that in all that's material, both our Brethren agree with us in our Testimony against Antinomianism, and we agree with them in a disapproval of the other Extremes. To evidence which, we shall repeat, (1.) Our Testimony against Dr. Crisp's Errors, when so many were endangered by his reprinted Books. (2.) Some part of our former Declarations against Popish, Socinian, and Arminian Errors, when our Brethren accused us thereof for subscribing the fore-said Testimony against Crispianism. (3.) We shall give an account of our Congregational Brethren's Declaration against Antinomian Errors. (4.) We shall evidence that this, taken together and examined with Candor, ought to be acknowledged a sufficient Vindication of the Approvers thereof from all hurtful Antinomian Errors. (5.) We shall add our further Testimony against Errors about Christ's Satisfaction, Introduction.

Content.

If Peace at least must not be allowed us after this, we must bewail a judicial stroke, and expect to be despised by such, who perceive our common hurt from these Debates, but have not Judgment to distinguish between the injured Seekers of Peace, and the injurious Fomenters of Trouble.
CHAP. I.

The State of Truth and Error, (subscribed by near Fifty of us,) drawn up and published by Mr. Williams, in a Book called Gospel-Truth stated and vindicated, first printed in the Year 1692.

Truth I. IT is certain from God's decree of election, that the Elect shall in time be justified, adopted, and saved in the way God hath appointed; and the whole meritorious cause and price of Justification, Adoption, and eternal Life, were perfect, when Christ finished the work of Satisfaction. Nevertheless, the Elect remain children of wrath, and subject to condemnation, till they are effectually called by the operation of the Spirit.

Error. The Elect are at no time of their lives under the wrath of God; nor are they subject to condemnation, if they should die before they believe; yea, when they are under the dominion of Sin, and in the practice of the grossest Villainies, they they are as much the Sons of God, and justified, as the very Saints in Glory.

Truth 2. Tho' our Sins were imputed to Christ with respect to the Guilt thereof, so that he, by the Father's appointment, and his own consent, became obliged, as Mediator, to bear the Punishment of our Iniquities; and he did bear those Punishments to the full Satisfaction of Justice, and to our actual Remission when we believe; nevertheless, the Filth of our Sins was not laid upon Christ; nor can he be called the Transgressor, or was he in God's account the Blasphemer, Murtherer, &c.

Error. God did not only impute the Guilt, and lay the Punishment of the Sins of the Elect upon Christ; but he laid all the very Sins of the Elect upon Christ, and that, as to their real Filthiness and Loathsomeness; yea so, that Christ was really the Blasphemer, Murtherer, and Sinner, and so accounted by the Father.

Truth 3. The Atonement made by Christ, by the appointment of God, is that, for which alone the Elect are pardoned, when it is applied to them. But the Elect are not immediately pardoned upon Christ's being appointed to suffer for them, nor as soon as the Atonement was made; nor is that Act of laying Sins on Christ, God's God's forgiving Act, by which we are personally discharged.

Error. The very Act of God's laying Sins on Christ upon the Cross, is the very actual discharge of all the Elect from all their Sins.

Truth 4. An Elect person ceaseth not to be a Sinner, upon the laying of our Sins upon Christ; that is, he remains a Sinner, as to the Guilt, till he believes, if adult. He is a Sinner, as to the Filth of Sin, till he be sanctified. He is a Sinner, as to the charge of the sinful Fact he commits, and that even after Pardon and Sanetration. Nevertheless, he is free from the Curse, when he is pardoned; and shall be purged from all the Filth of Sin, when he is perfect in Holiness. And tho' Christ did bear the Punishment of our Iniquity, yet it never was Christ's Iniquity, but ours.

Error. The Elect upon the death of Christ ceas'd to be Sinners; and ever since their Sins are none of their Sins, but they are the Sins of Christ.

Truth 5. The Obligation of suffering for our Sins was upon Christ, from his undertaking the office of a Mediator, to the moment wherein he finished his satisfactory Atonement. The Punishment of our Sins lay upon Christ, from the Peace with Truth; or

Chap. first moment, to the last of his state of
I. Humiliation.

Error. The time when our Sins were laid actually on Christ, was, when he was nailed to the Cross, and God actually forsook him; and they continued on him till his Resurrection.

Truth 6. Tho' God testified his threatened Indignation against Sin, in the awful Sufferings of Christ's Soul and Body in his Agony, and suspended those delightful Communications of the Divine Nature to the Human Nature of Christ, as to their wonted degrees; yet God was never separated from Christ, much less during his Body's lying in the grave; neither was the Father ever displeased with Christ, and far less did he abhor him, because of the Filthiness of Sin upon him.

Error. Christ was on the account of the Filthiness of Sins, while they lay upon him, separated from God, odious to him, and even the Object of God's Abhorrence, and this to the time of his Resurrection.

Truth 7. The Mediatorial Righteousness of Christ is so imputed to true Believers, as that for the sake thereof they are pardoned and accepted unto Life eternal; it being reckoned to them, and pleadable by them for these uses, as if they had personally Sonally done and suffered what Christ did \textit{for them}; whereby they are delivered from the Curse, and no other Atonement nor meriting Price of saving Benefits can be demanded from them. Nevertheless, this Mediatorial Righteousness is not subjectively in them, nor is there a \textit{Change of Person} betwixt them and Christ; neither are they \textit{as righteous as he}, but there remain Spots and Blemishes in them, until Christ by his Spirit perfect that Holiness begun in all true Believers; which he will effect, before he brings them to Heaven. \textit{See the 2d Truth}; and note, it is only \textit{Dr. Crisp's Change of Person} is denied, \textit{viz. a perfect Change which makes us as righteous as he}, &c. but not Christ's dying in our stead, \textit{which in this Book is oft asserted}.

\textbf{Error.} \textit{Every Believer, or Elect person, is as righteous as Christ, and there is a perfect Change of Person and Condition betwixt Christ and the Elect}; he was what we are, \textit{viz. as sinful as we}; and we are what he was, \textit{viz. perfectly holy, and without spot or blemish}.

\textbf{Truth 8. I shall express it} in the words of the \textit{Assembly}: "\textit{The Grace of God is manifested in the second Covenant, in that he freely provideth, and offereth to Sinners a Mediator, and Life and Salvation by him; and requiring Faith}
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. " Faith as the Condition to interest them in him, promiseth and giveth his holy Spirit to all his Elect, to work in them that Faith, with all other saving Graces; and to enable them unto all Obedience, as the evidence of the truth of their Faith and Thankfulness to God, and as the way which he hath appointed them to Salvation." Note, Reader, that these Divines do here join together the Covenant of Redemption with Christ, and the Gospel-Covenant whereby are dispensed to us the Benefits impetrated by Christ; which two distinguished would lead to clearer thoughts.

Error. The Covenant of Grace hath no Condition to be performed on man's part, tho' in the strength of Christ: Neither is Faith itself the Condition of this Covenant; but all the saving benefits of this Covenant, are actually ours before we are born: Neither are we required so much as to believe, that we may come to have an Interest in the benefits of the Covenant.

Truth 9. I shall express this in the words of the Assembly, and Congregational Elders at the Savoy, of saving Faith:

Conseff. & Decl. chap. xiv. a. 2. " By this grace, a Christian believeth to be true whatever is revealed in the Word, for the authority of God speaking therein; and acteth differently upon that which each particular Passage thereof containeth;
An End to Discord.

"taineth; yielding Obedience to the Commands, trembling at the Threatnings, and embracing the Promises of God, for this life, and that which is to come. But the principal Acts of saving Faith, are accepting, receiving, and resting upon Christ alone for Justification, Sanctification, and eternal Life, by virtue of the Covenant of Grace."

Error. Saving Faith is nothing but our Persuasion, or absolute concluding within ourselves, that our Sins are pardoned, and that Christ is ours.

Truth 10. Christ is freely offered to be a Head and Saviour to the vilest Sinners, who will knowingly assent to the truth of the Gospel, and from a conviction of their Sin and Misery out of Christ are humbled, and truly willing to renounce all their Idols and Sins; and denying their own carnal Self and Merits, accept of Christ as offered in the Gospel; relying on him alone, for Justification, Sanctification, and eternal Life.

Error. Christ is offered to Blasphemers, Murtherers, and the worst of Sinners; that they, remaining ignorant, unconvinc'd, unhumbled, and resolved in their purpose to continue such, may be assured they have a full Interest in Christ; and this, by only concluding in their own minds upon this Offer, that Christ is theirs.
Chap. Truth II. Every man is without Christ, or not united to Christ, until he be effectually called: But when by this Call the Spirit of God inclineth and enableth him willingly to accept of Christ as a Head and Saviour, a man becomes united to him, and a partaker of those Influences and Privileges which are peculiar to the members of the Lord Jesus.

Error. All the Elect are actually united to Christ, before they have the Spirit of Christ, or at all believe in him, even before they are born; yea, and against their Will.

Truth 12. Tho' Faith be no way a meritorious Cause of a Sinner's Justification, yet God hath promised to justify all such as truly believe; and requires Faith, as an indispensable qualification in all whom he will justify for Christ's merits; declaring, that Unbelief shall not only hinder men's knowing that they are justified, but that it is a bar to any person's being justified while he continues an Unbeliever.

Error. The whole use of Faith in Justification, is only to manifest that we were justified before; and Faith is no way necessary to bring a Sinner into a justified State, nor at all useful to that end.
An End to Discord.

In a Digression there about Repentance, Chap. I.

Truth. Altho' neither Faith nor Repentance be any part of the meriting Righteousness for which we are justified; and the Habits of both are wrought at the same time, and included in the regenerating principle; and there must be an assenting act of Faith, before there be any exercise of true Repentance; and Repentance, as consisting in the fruits meet for it, viz. an external Reformation and a fruitful Life, must follow Pardon, as doth also an ingenuous Sorrow for Sin in the sense of Pardon: Nevertheless Repentance, as it consists in some degree of Humblings and Sorrow, from convictions of our lost State and the Evil of Sin, with a sincere purpose of Heart to turn from our Sin and Idols to God, is absolutely necessary in order to the forgiveness of Sin.

Error. Our Sins are forgiven before any Repentance; and Believers ought not to complain, or mourn, or sorrow for the Sins they have committed.

Truth 13. Tho' neither Holiness, sincere Obedience, or good Works, do make any Atonement for Sin; or are in the least the meritorious Righteousness, whereby Salvation is caused, or for which this, or any Blessing, becomes due to us as of debt: Yet as the Spirit of Christ freely worketh all Holiness
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. Holiness in the Soul, and enableth us to sincere Obedience and good Works; so the Lord Jesus hath of Grace, and for his own Merits, promised to bring to Heaven such as are partakers of true Holiness, as perform this sincere Obedience, and do these good Works perceivingly; and appoints these as the way and means of a Believer's obtaining Salvation, and several other Blessings; requiring these as indispensable duties and qualifications of all such whom he will so save and bless, and excluding all that want or neglect them, or live under the power of what's contrary thereto, viz. Profaneness, Rebellion, and utter Unfruitfulness.

Error. Men have nothing to do in order to Salvation; nor is Sanctification a jot the way of any person to Heaven: Nor can the Graces or Duties of Believers, no, nor Faith itself, do them the least Good, or prevent the least Evil; nor are they of any use to their Peace or Comfort; yea, tho' Christ be explicitly owned, and they be done in the strength of the Spirit of God: And a Believer ought not to think, he is more pleasing to God by any Grace he acteth, or Good he doth; nor may men expect any Good to a Nation, by the Humiliation, earnest Prayer, or Reformation of a People.

Truth. 14. Tho' we ought to intend God's God's Glory as our supream End in all our Duties, and to design therein the expressing our Love and Gratitude to God for his Benefits, with a great regard to publick Good: Yet we also lawfully may, and ought to strive after Grace, to grow in it, and to perform holy Duties and Services, with an Eye to, and Concern for our own spiritual and eternal Advantage.

Error. No man ought to propose to himself any Advantage by any religious Duty he performeth; nor ought he in the least to intend the Profit of his own Soul by any Christian Endeavours; it being vain and unlawful to do any thing with an Eye to our spiritual or eternal Good, tho' in Subordination to God's Glory in Christ.

Truth 15. The ordinary way whereby a man attaineth a well-grounded Assurance, is not by immediate objective Revelation, or an inward Voice saying, Thy Sins are forgiven thee: But when the Believer is examining his Heart and Life by the Word, the holy Spirit enlightens the mind there to discern Faith, and Love, and such other qualifications, which the Gospel declareth to be infallible Signs of Regeneration; and he adds such power to the Testimony of Conscience, for the truth and in-being of these Graces, as begets in the Soul a joyful sense of its reconciled State, and some comfortable freedom from those

Chap. those Fears which accompany a doubting Christian: And according to the evidence of these Graces, Assurance is ordinarily strong or weak.

Error. Assurance is not attained by the Evidence of Scripture-marks or Signs of Grace, or by the Spirit's discovering to us that he hath wrought in our Hearts any holy Qualifications: But Assurance comes only by an inward Voice of the Spirit, saying, Thy Sins are forgiven thee, and our believing thereupon that our Sins are forgiven.

Truth 16. The Sins of Believers have the loathsome-ness of Sin adhering to them, which God seeth, and accounteth the Committers guilty thereby: And they ought to charge themselves therewith, so as to stir up themselves to Repentance, and renew their actings of Faith on Christ for Forgiveness. Nevertheless, they ought not thereby to fear their being out of a justified State, further than their Falls give them just cause of suspecting, that Sin hath dominion over them, and that their first believing on Christ was not sincere.

Error. God seeth no Sin in Believers, tho' he see the Fact; neither doth he charge them with any Sin; nor ought they to charge themselves with any Sin, nor be at all sad for them; nor confess, repent, or do any thing, as a means of their Pardon;
An End to Discord.

... no, nor in order to affuring them-Chap. selves of Pardon, even when they commit Murther, Adultery, or the grossest Wickedness.

Truth 17. It is true of Believers, that if Sin should have dominion over them, they would thereby be subject to Condemnation: And tho' the Grace of God will prevent the dominion of Sin in every elect Believer, and so keep them from eternal Death; yet true Believers may by Sin bring great hurt upon themselves in Soul and Body, which they ought to fear; and they may expect a share in national judgments, according as they have contributed to common Guilt.

Error. The grossest Sins that Believers can commit, cannot do them the least harm; neither ought they to fear the least hurt by their own Sins, nor by national Sins; yea, tho' themselves have had a hand therein.

Truth 18. Tho' God is not so angry with his people for their Sins, as to cast them out of his Covenant-favour; yet by their Sins he is so displeased, as for them to correct his Children, tho' he speaks Instructions by his Rebukes.

Error. None of the Afflictions of Believers have in them the least of God's Displeasure against their persons for their Sins.
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. 19. Tho' the present sincere Holiness of Believers be not perfect, according to the Precepts of the Word; nor valuable by the Sanction of the Law of Innocency; nor any Atonement for our defects; and we still need forgiveness, and the Merits of Christ, for Acceptance thereof: Yet as far as it prevails, it's lovely in itself, and pleasing to God, and is not Dung or Filth.

Error. The greatest Holiness in Believers, tho' wrought in them by the Holy Ghost, is mere Dung, Rottenness, and Filthiness, as in them.

Truth 20. Gospel-preaching is, when the Messengers of Christ do publish to fallen Sinners the good news of Salvation by Christ, to be obtained in the way which he hath appointed in his Word; freely offering Salvation on his Terms; earnestly persuading and commanding men in the name of Christ, to comply with those Terms, as ever they would escape the Misery they are under, and possess the Benefits he hath purchased; directing all to look to him for Strength, and to acknowledge him as the only Mediator, and his Obedience and Sufferings as the sole Atonement for Sin, and meriting Cause of all Blessings; instructing them in all revealed Truth, and by Gospel-motives urging them to obey the whole Will of God, God, as a Rule of Duty, but especially to be sincere and upright, pressing after Perfection.

Error. Gospel-preaching is, to teach men, they were as much pardoned, and as acceptable to God always, as when they are regenerate; and while they were ungodly, they had the same Interest in God and Christ as when they believe; neither can Sin any way hinder their Salvation, or their Peace; nor have they any thing to do to further either of them, Christ having done all for them, and given himself to them, before any holy qualification or endeavour.

Truth 21. Legal Preaching is, to preach the Law as a Covenant of innocency, or of works; or to preach the Mosaic or Jewish Covenant of peculiarity: But it is not Legal Preaching, to require and persuade to faith, holiness, or duties, by Promises and Threatnings, according to the Grace of the Gospel, and to direct Men to fear and hope accordingly.

Error. Legal Preaching is, to call People to act any Grace, or do any Duty, as a required means of Salvation or inward Peace; or to threaten them with Death or any Affliction, to cause Fear, if they commit the grossest Sins, and backslide, and fall away; or to promise them any Blessing upon their Obedience to the Com-
Peace with Truth; or Commandments of Christ; or to urge the Threatnings, to persuade Sinners to believe and repent.

CHAP. II.

CHAP. A LTHO’ we hoped the Caution used in the forefaid State of Truth and Error, would prevent the Imputation of Socinianism, and other hurtful Errors; yet finding our Brethren dissatisfied, we subscribed with them, Anno 1692. (about seven Months after the State of Truth was published,) certain Doctrinal Propositions collected out of the Assembly’s Confession; which we printed in 1693. with this Title, An Agreement in Doctrinals, &c. But that being too long to be here inferred, we shall confine ourselves to the more material Parts of what further Account we have given of our Judgment concerning the Doctrines of Satisfaction and justificaction; which may be seen at large.
large in our Answer to the Report, pag. Chap. III. 330, 336, 359, & seq.

In a Paper sent to our Congregational Brethren, Anno 1694. it is thus declared:

"We the united Ministers in and about London, do renounce and testify against these following Opinions.

"1. That there is no definite number of Persons elected from all Eternity, whom God will by his appointed means certainly save, and bring to eternal Life; leaving the rest, who fall under a just Condemnation for their original and actual Sins, especially for their neglect and contempt of the means of Salvation.

"2. That Christ died equally for all Men, not intending the final Salvation of some more than others.

"3. That Men have in their own Power, by the use of the natural faculties of their Reason and Will, unsatisfied by the special Light and Grace of the Holy Ghost, to perform all that is necessary to Salvation; or that his special efficacious Light and Grace is not necessary to their conversion, perseverance, and final salvation.

"4. That any of them whom God hath foreknown, predestinated, and called effectually according to the purpose of
Peace with Truth; or

CHAP. " of his Grace, shall fall away, either II. " totally, or so as not to be finally glo" rified.

" 5. THAT Faith, Repentance, a " holy Conversation, or any Act or Work
" whatever done by us, or wrought by " the Spirit of God in us, are any Part " of that Righteousness, for the sake of " which, or on the account whereof,
" God doth justify any man, or entitle
" him to eternal Life."

Then follows a Testimony against the other Extremes, viz. Antinomian Errors.

Again, Anno 1696. in a Paper (call'd The third Paper,) sent to our Brethren, we thus give our sense.

" I. Concerning Justification. That
" altho' the express Word of God do af" fert the necessity of Regeneration, to our " entring into the Kingdom of God;
" and requires Repentance, that our Sins
" may be blotted out; and Faith in " Christ, that we may be justified; and " Holiness of heart and life, without " which we cannot see God: Yet that " none of these, or any Work done by " Men, or wrought by the Spirit of God
" in them, is, under any denomination
" whatsoever*, any part of the Righte" ousness,

* Note, It was declared, that by the words [under any denomination whatsoever,] see exclude all Righteousness.
II. Of a Commutation of Persons between Christ and us. As we are to consider our Lord Jesus Christ in his obedience and sufferings, as God and Man invested with the office of Mediator; so it is apparent, this Commutation of Persons with us was not natural, in respect of either Nature, by which his individual Substance should become ours, and ours his; nor moral, in respect of qualities or actions, whereby he should become inherently sinful, and we immediately sinless; nor was it any change, whereby his office of Mediator should be transferred on us: But it is to be understood in a legal, or judicial Sense, (as we may call it,) viz. He by agreement between the Father and him, came into our room and stead, not to repent and believe for us, which the Gospel requires of us as our Duty, (tho' he hath undertaken the Elect shall in due time be enabled thereto;) but to an-

rousness from being meritorious, or atoning, yea, or a procuring cause of these benefits; none is at all so, but the Righteousness of Christ: But we intended not to exclude, what the Gospel requireth in order to our interest in these benefits, given for the sake of Christ's Righteousness.
Peace with Truth; or

Chapter II.

\[\text{I.} \]

For our violation of the Law of works: He being made Sin for us, who knew no Sin, that we might be made the Righteousness of God in him. 2 Cor. v. 21.

\[\text{III.} \]

Of God's being pleased or displeased with Christ, as standing and suffering in our stead. We judge that God was always pleased with Christ, both in his Person, and in the Execution of all his Offices, (which is expressed most particularly in that of his Priestly, John x. 17, 18. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my Life, &c.) and was no otherwise displeased, than as having a dispassionate Will to inflict upon him the Punishment of our Sins, which he had undertaken to bear, that God might without Injury to his Justice or Honour, pardon and save penitent Believers for his Satisfaction, and Intercession founded thereon."

We also, in 1697, delivered our Judgment in this Proposition to our Brethren.

"(1.) That Repentance towards God is commanded, in order to Remission of Sin. (2.) That Faith in Christ is commanded by the Gospel, in order to the Justification of our persons before God, for the sake of the alone Righteousness of Christ: (3.) That the Word of God requires Perseverance in true true Faith and Holiness, that we may be partakers of the heavenly Glory.

(4.) That the Gospel promiseth Pardon through the blood of Christ to the Penitent, Justification before God to the Believer, and the heavenly Glory to such as persevere in Faith and Holiness; and also declareth, that God will not pardon the Impenitent, justify the Unbeliever, nor glorify the Apostate or Unholy. (5.) That justifying Faith is not only a persuasion of the understanding, but also a receiving and resting upon Christ alone for Salvation. (6.) That by Change of Person is meant, that whereas we were condemned for our Sins, the Lord Jesus was substituted in our room, to bear the Punishment of our Sins, for the Satisfaction of divine Justice, that whoever believes on him, may be acquitted and saved: But it is not intended, that the Filth of Sin was upon Christ, nor that he was a Criminal in God's account. (7.) That by Christ being our Surety is meant, that Jesus Christ our Mediator obliged himself to expiate our Sins by his blood, and to purchase eternal Life for all that believe, and Faith and every saving Grace for the Elect: But it is not intended, that we were legally reputed to make Satisfaction, or to purchase eternal Life. (8.) That by Christ's answering for us the

CHAP. II.

"the Obligations of the violated Law of works is intended, that whereas the Law obliged us to die for our Sins, Christ became obliged to die in our stead; and whereas we were, after we had sinned, still obliged to yield perfect obedience, Christ perfectly obeyed the Law, that upon the account of his active and passive obedience Believers might be forgiven, and entitled to eternal Life: But it is not intended, that the Sense of the Law of works should be, that if we or Christ obey'd we should live, and if Christ suffered we should not die, tho' we sinned; nor that Believers are justified, or to be judged by the Law of works, but by the Gospel; altho' the Righteousness for the sake of which they are justified, be as perfect as that Law of works required, and far more valuable."
C H A P. III.

The State of Truth and Error, published in the Congregational Ministers Declaration against Antinomian Errors, about December, 1698.

Error 1. THAT the eternal Decree gives such an existence to the Justification of the Elect, as makes their State whilst in unbelief, to be the same as when they do believe, in all respects save only as to the Manifestation; and that there is no other Justification by Faith, but what is in their Consciences.

Truth. THAT there is a difference between the State of the Elect, whilst in unbelief, and when believers, besides what is manifestative to their Consciences. Decl. pag. 12.

Error 2. THAT the Elect, considered as in their natural State, or as in the first Adam, are not under the denunciation of Wrath by the Law, as well as other unbelieving and impenitent Sinners.

Truth. THAT the Elect, before they believe,
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. believe, are not personally and actually justified in the Court of Heaven; pag. 13.

and none may expect to be pardoned in a state of Unbelief and Impenitence. Pag 47.

Error 3. That pardoned Sin is no Sin; and therefore God cannot see Sin in his People, to be displeased with them for their Sins; nor doth God express his fatherly displeasure against them by any Afflictions laid upon them.

Truth. That pardoned, yea mortified Sins, are truly and properly Sins; and God seeth the Sins of his own People, and is displeased with them for their Sins. Pag. 18, 19.

Error 4. That Believers are not bound to confess or mourn over Sin, as committed by them; or to pray for Pardon of Sin, in making a daily acknowledgment of a need of it, because it was pardoned before committed; and pardoned Sin is no Sin.

Truth. That when Believers do sin, it is their Duty to humble themselves, to confess their Sins, and pray for Pardon. Pag. 19.

Error 5. That Believers ought not to be afraid of committing Sin, because their Sins can do them no hurt.

Truth. The Sins of Believers do hurt them, them, and they should be afraid to commit them; seeing they impair their Graces and Comforts, harden their Hearts, wound their Consciences, hurt and scandalize others, grieve God's holy Spirit, expose to his fatherly displeasure, and bring temporal Judgments upon them. Pag. 22.

Error 6. That they must do no good Work or Duty for their own Benefit, or with an Eye to their own Salvation.

Error 7. That Believers not having in themselves an Ability to do good Works, are not bound to perform any good Duty, unless excited thereunto by a special motion of the Spirit.

Truth. Tho' Believers Ability to do good Works is not at all in themselves, but wholly from the Spirit of Christ, yet are they not hereupon to grow negligent, as if they were not bound to perform any Duty, unless upon a special motion of the Spirit; but they ought to be diligent in stirring up the Grace of God that is in them. Pag. 27.

Error 8. That Sanctification, evidenced by the Spirit of God to their Consciences, is not a Sign, Mark, or Evidence of their Justification; and that Marks and Signs for Peace with Truth; or

for the trial of a Believer's Faith are of no use; for Faith lying in a full persuasion and assurance that their Persons were actually justified and pardoned in Christ, it is a Sin to question, Whether they do savvily believe, or no?

Truth. Saving Faith lieth not in a full persuasion and assurance that our Sins are actually pardoned; but Marks and Signs for the trial of our spiritual Estate are useful, and to be sought after; and Sanctification, evidenced by the Spirit of God to our Consciences, is a certain Sign and Mark of our Justification. Pag. 27, 28.

Error 9. That Gospel-Ministers are not to preach the Law in its Commands and Curses, to convince Men of their need of Christ; nor are Believers obliged to regard the Law as delivered by Moses, nor as externally propounded; nor are they bound, when they commit Sin, to look to the Law for further discoveries and convictions of the remaining Corruptions that are in them, because by the Gospel its Obligations are dissolved.

Truth. That the Law delivered by Moses continues in its Commands and Curses undisolved; and it's still of Use to convince of Sin, that we may see a need of Christ; and therefore it is to be preached and externally propounded, and we are to look unto it: Pag. 36. And tho' there is no no Sin so small but it deserves Damnation, CHAP. III. yet there is no Sin so great that it shall bring Damnation to them that truly repent; which makes the constant preaching of Repentance necessary. Pag. 39.

Error 10. THAT Ministers of the Gospel ought not to propound the Offers of Salvation, unto all those to whom God calls them to preach; seriously inviting them to improve the Means of Grace, that they may be saved; and assuring them in the way of their ministerial duty, of the Salvation of all such as believe in Christ; because they want Ability to clofe with the Offer, and all shall not be saved.

Truth. THAT tho' men want Ability to believe savingly, yet it's the Duty of Gospel Ministers to make the Offer, and to testify to them, that whoever believes and repents shall be saved; and that it's the People's Duty, to make use of their natural Faculties, with such external Means and workings of the Spirit, as God affords them, that they may believe, repent, and be saved. Pag. 41, 42.

Error 11. THAT by God's laying our Sins upon Christ, he became every way as sinful as we, and we every way as righteous as he; and that therefore persons may expect to be pardoned, whilst they continue in a state of Unbelief and Impen-
38 Peace with Truth; or

Chap. tence; and that continued Repentance and

III. Holiness are not in the nature of the thing, nor by the constitution of the Gospel, necessary to our being possessed of eternal Life.

Truth. Our Sins were not laid upon Christ, so as to make him every way as sinful as we, and we are not every way as righteous as Christ; and none may expect to be pardoned in a state of Unbelief and Impenitence; and continued Repentance and Holiness are necessary to our possession of eternal Life. Pag. 46, 47.

CHAP. IV.

It is made evident, that this Declaration of our Brethren, taken altogether, and examined with due Charity and Candour, ought to be acknowledged a sufficient Vindication of the Approvers thereof from all hurtful Anti-nomian Errors.

Chap. To this end, I. We think that Christian Charity and Candour oblige us, to judge of what they have declared by these.
An End to Discord.

there following Rules; and we expect the same for our selves from them. (1.) That the omission of any Points unmentioned, is not to be attributed to a mistaken Judgment concerning them; and far less, when the things expressed are granted to be Truths or Errors upon a reason that alike infers what is omitted. (2.) That the Approvers do truly intend for substance what is declared. (3.) That in a Body of Subscribers, some few may be more narrow in their conceptions; and therefore, to avoid a Breach, must be accommodated in the phrasing of some Points, beyond what the others, if at full liberty, would either need or chuse. (4.) If any thing be a little darkly or suspiciously worded in one part, and more expressly and fully in another, the latter must be the Index of their Judgment; upon which account we cite not only their State of Error and Truth, but refer to the Pages containing their Explanations and approved Authorities, some of which will be mentioned afterwards. (5.) That they ought not to be charged with the Consequences of any occasional Passages, which they disown.

II. These just Rules being admitted, we shall enumerate the hurtful Antinomian Errors, as Antinomianism is described in the laft Age, (which in many things differs from what was so called at first,) and under each refer you to the places, (besides the
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. the abovementioned State of Error and IV. Truth, wherein the Brethren have so laudably vindicated themselves by their Declaration.

The dangerous parts of Antinomianism are reducible to these general Heads. [1.] As it renders the Ministry unapt to its proper Ends. [2.] As it tends to Libertinism in Practice. [3.] As it hinders a well-grounded Assurance, and encourageth Presumption. And, [4.] As it reproacheth Christ our blessed Redeemer. Against each of which our Brethren bear their Testimony.

[1.] The hurtful Antinomian Errors, which render the Ministry unapt to its proper Ends, are, (1.) Unduly limiting the Offers of Salvation, and decrying Arguments to excite Sinners to use their Endeavours under the assistance of Gospel-Means and common Grace. Against this see Error 10. and from pag. 41, to 46. (2.) Forbidding and branding as legal, the preaching of Duties and Threatnings, and the applying of promised Benefits as Motives to Faith and other Duties, whereto those Benefits are promised. Against which see Error 9. and pag. 36, 39. Error 6. and pag. 25, 26, 45. (3.) Denying that the Elect whilst unconverted, are under the Curse of the Law; and affirming they are united to Christ, and justified before God, and pardoned, whilst impenitent impenitent Infidels. Against which see Chap. Errors 1, 2, 11. and pag. 12, to 18. and IV. 47, 58.

[2.] The hurtful Antinomian Errors tending to Libertinism in Practice, besides the Impediments to a Sinner's conviction and conversion under the fore-mentioned Head of the Ministry, are such as these: (1.) That God seeth no Sin in his People, accounts them not their Sins but Christ's, and is not displeased with his People, nor afflicts them for their Sins. Against which see Error 3. and pag. 19. (2.) That Repentance is not necessary to Forgiveness; nor are Believers to mourn for Sin, or to beg Pardon, nor to confess it, unless it be to shew, for Christ's glory, how many the Sins are which are become his. Against which see Error 4. and pag. 19, 20, 21, 47, 58. (3.) That their Sins can do Believers no hurt. Against this see Error 5. pag. 22. 23. (4.) That we ought not to intend our own Benefit by our Duties, neither are bound to perform Duties unless excited thereto by the Spirit, nor are any Acts of our Obedience rewardable; and that continued Repentance and Holiness are not by the constitution of the Gospel necessary to our being possessed of eternal Life. Against this see Errors 6, 10, 11. and pag. 25, 26, 27, 47, 58, 59. (5.) That justifying Faith is a Persuasion, that Christ is mine, and that my Sins are pardoned Peace with Truth; or doned in Christ. Against this see Error IV. 8. and pag. 30, 31.

[3.] The hurtful Antinomian Error which hinders a well-grounded Assurance and Peace, and also encourages Presumption, is, that besides the last description of Faith, we are not to try our State by marks and signs of Sanctification. Against this see Error 8. and pag. 32, 33, 34.

[4.] The hurtful Antinomian Errors reproachful to Christ our Redeemer, are such as these; that Christ is as sinful as we, and we are as righteous as Christ. Against which see Error 11. and pag. 48, 57.

If the Reader consult these places, and compare them with our State of Truth and Error in the first Chapter, he cannot but rejoice in our Brethrens Agreement with us in a Testimony against Antinomianism.
CHAP. V.

SOCINIAN Errors concerning Christ's Satisfaction: Also Limborch's, with some other Arminians, concerning Christ's Satisfaction. SOCINIAN Errors as to Justification: Limborch's, with some other Arminian Errors, about Justification. With a State of Truths opposite to each of these, as also to Popish Errors.

Finding our Brethren suggest in the Preface to this Declaration, V. that after all we have said, (in Chap. 1, 2.) yet still we ought to do more to discharge ourselves from hurtful Errors about Christ's Satisfaction, and our Justification; we shall, to promote Peace, renounce several more Errors about those two Doctrines wherein we are suspected, and tell them what we think to be Truths.
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. Error 1. Punitive Justice against V. Sin is no property of God, but only an effect of his Will, and therefore there was no need of any Satisfaction to be made by Christ for Sin; nor is it less than ridiculous to say, God was at once just as well as merciful in bringing about our Salvation by Christ. Socin. Opera Theol. tom. i. Prælect. cap. 16. & tom. ii. de Servator. par. 1. cap. 1. Præelect. cap. 16. Woltzog. in Mat. xix. 28. Crell. Resp. ad Grot. cap. 1.

Truth. God is essentially just, and so zealous for the Honour of his Law when enacted, and his Government, that Sin must not go unpunished; and therefore if Sinners be saved from the Punishments threatened by the violated Law for Christ their Mediator’s sake, it was necessary that he made Satisfaction to Punitive Justice by enduring the penal effects of God’s wrath.

Error 2. Jesus Christ is not the true eternal most High God, of the same substance, authority and power with the Father. Socin. tom. ii. Resp. ad Jac. Vujeki, cap. 1, &c.

Truth. Jesus Christ is the true eternal most High God, of the same substance, authority and power with the Father; and in time assumed the Human Nature,
An End to Discord.

Note. This Article is inserted, because the Value of Christ's obedience and death, for Satisfaction and Merit, was derived from the Dignity of Christ's Person as God: And therefore tho' the Socinians faintly argue, that if Christ were the eternal God, it would not render his death a Satisfaction; yet it's evident, their great concern in denying Christ's Satisfaction is to prevent the unanswerable Argument this would be for his Deity. The like is also to be seen by their notion of the Lord's-Supper.

Error 3. Christ did not by his blood acquire or purchase the Gospel-Covenant, nor was his death an impulsive Cause of God's promising to men the blessings of that Covenant; nor did it move him to make such Promises: But Christ was only the Mediator, that is, the Sponsor of it, who assured men that God would accomplish it, and who in God's name, and by his command, performed such things as belonged to the confirming and executing of the said Covenant. Socin. tom. ii. pag. 168, 199. Crell. vol. i. pag. 612. & vol. iii. Resp. ad Grot. pag. 19, 128, 171.

Truth. Christ did not only confirm the Gospel-Covenant to men, and do such things things as belonged to the execution of the Gospel-Promises; but God as Governor made these Promises in consideration of the death of Christ, as what vindicated the Glory of his Government in offering and promising such blessings to condemned Sinners; altho' as our absolute Lord and Proprietor he freely purposed within himself, that those blessings should be granted in what method he judged fit.
Peace with Truth; or

Error 4. Christ was for no other cause a Mediator, nor so called, but that he was appointed by God a middle Person between himself and men; not that he should appease God towards men, but that he should declare God already pacified to them, and most evidently confirm the same by himself: And as for men who were haters of and enemies to God, them he was to reconcile to God, (that is, to convert them,) and be their eternal Lawgiver, and faithful Interpreter of the divine Will to them, by whom they might always have access to God, and obtain eternal Life. Socin. tom. i. pag. 788.

Truth. Jesus Christ was by divine adjustment a middle Person between God and Sinners, and as such laid his hand on both; undertaking to appease God's wrath, and procure Salvation for us at his hand; and also to make God and the way of Salvation known to us, for our Reconciliation tion and Obedience to God: And by him God still imparts his blessings to us, and admits us to a free access to himself.

Error 5. Christ is called a Surety, as a Sponsor or Messenger on God's part to us; but he promised nothing to God for us. Crell. vol. i. pag. 612.

Truth. Tho' Christ was not a joint federating Party with us in the Covenant of works, yet he was not only a Surety on God's part to us, but he was a mediating Surety on both parts; and as such, he engaged in the Covenant of Redemption to make Atonement for us, and in the Gospel-Covenant, that all true Believers shall persevere to the obtaining of eternal Life.

Error 6. Christ was not an High-Priest while on Earth, nor was his Blood offered by him to God; but it was himself was offered, and that not on the Cross, but when he entered into Heaven: Yet the death of Christ so far belongs to his Priesthood, that he was prepared by his death to become a High-Priest, and to offer himself a perfect Sacrifice for Sin in Heaven; neither of which could be, according to the Decree of God, if his death had not intervened. Crell. vol. iii. Resp. ad Grot. cap. 10. vol. i. pag. 613. & vol. ii. par. 1. pag. 162. Socin. tom. i. Praelett. Theol. cap. 23.

Truth.
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. Truth. Christ was an High-Priest while he was on Earth, and as such upon the Cross offered up himself by his bloody death a perfect Sacrifice, whereby his Blood was a propitiatory Offering at the very time it was shed; and tho' in the virtue thereof the Saints were saved before his Incarnation, and Christ for ever intercedeth in Heaven, yet the presenting of himself or it there, makes no addition to the Perfection of it as a Sacrifice.

Error 7. There is no use nor place in the Priesthood of Christ, for appeasing God's wrath, or offering any Sacrifice, not in Heaven, as a condition of obtaining Remission properly as from God, or impetrating the same: But Christ's death is a means of our enjoying that Remission from God, and it was indirectly a condition thereof as to be given to us; that is, it was a condition imposed on Christ, without which, by the divine Decree, he was not to obtain Authority from God to forgive us our Sins; and it may be called a Sacrifice to God's mercy, as of his own free Grace reconciled, but not as offended with Sinners. Socin. tom. ii. pag. 665, 666. Crell. vol. i. pag. 612. Woltzog. in Job. iii. 16.

Truth. The first and principal use of Christ's Priesthood, was to offer on the Cross a Sacrifice to appease God's wrath against against Sinners, and to impetrat Remif-

Effect and eternal Life; that so God the offended Governor might, consistently with the honour of his Law, and of all his divine Perfections, be at liberty, and inclined, as well to give the said Blessings, as that we might become actual Partakers of them from Christ, as authorized to apply them to us: And all the other Sacerdotal

Acts of Christ do refer to this.

Error 8. Redemption mentioned in the New Testament, signifies no more nor other, than a freeing us from the Punishment of Sin without any proper Price intervening: And when it's said, Redemption is obtained by the blood of Christ, it is not meant, that the blood of Christ could move God, or that God was thereby obliged to grant us deliverance from the Punishment of our Sins; but that the shedding of his blood ought to intervene, that we might be moved thereby to accept that deliverance when offered to us. Neither did Christ buy us, but God by Christ asserted his Right to us; and tho' our deliverance from Punishment is gotten as if by a Price, yet this is not as if the blood of Christ were paid to any. Socin. tom. i.

145, 147. Slichting. in Rom. v. 10.

Truth. Redemption by the blood of Christ, is, that we are bought by his blood as a proper Price, and delivered from the curse of the Law, and captivity under Sin and Satan, as by a proper Ransom paid to the just Governor of the world.

Error 9. Christ by his death did not reconcile God to us, but he reconcileth us to God by his death, that is, we come thereby to be converted to God, and cease to offend him; yea, God's anger was so far from being appeased by the death of Christ, that thereby it was declared, that God was before pacified to us. Socin. tom. i. pag. 144, 145, 665, 666. Crell. vol. iii. Resp. ad Grot. pag. 154. 155. Slichting. tom. ii. pag. 214, 401. & in Rom. v. 10. & 2 Cor. v. 18.

Truth. We being Children of wrath because of our Sin, the Lord Jesus did by his death atone our offended God, who became thereby so reconciled, that he offereth Peace to Sinners, and requireth and urgeth us by believing aright to accept thereof; and upon our penitent believing he becomes actually reconciled to us, delighting in us, and dealing with us as Objects of his restored Favour.

Note, [1] Crellius, Resp. ad Grot. cap. 8. part. 3. disputes against this, as the Error of Grotius and the rest of the Orthodox, stating it in these words; "God was before angry, but being appeased by the death of Christ he determined to lay aside
An End to Discord.

... aside his Anger; and upon our believing... actually lay V.

[2.] Grotius, de Satisf. cap. 7. distinguishes the actings of the divine Will; as, (1.) Before Christ's death is decreed, &c. then God is angry with the Sinner, yet so as not to be averse to all methods of Reconciliation. (2.) Upon Christ's death, (as well when fixed, as when endured,) then God not only appoints the way, but promiseth to be reconciled. (3.) When a man believes in Christ with a right Faith, and Christ according to the tenor of the Covenant presents the believer to God; then God lays aside his Anger, and receives the person into Favour, (or is actually reconciled.)

[3.] How little do well-meaning Antinomians consider, that not only in the third Error, &c. but in this last Error, they agree with the Socinians? and that in a Point, whence most of their false notions about Christ's Satisfaction proceed. For, see you not? they hold, that after God's absolute Decree to justify us, there is no wrath in God to appease, the change is only on our part; and no Reconciliation but on our side, whom God begs to be reconciled to him, he being already at Peace with us.

Error 10. By Christ's dying for our Sins as being laid on him, is not meant, that that Christ according to his Sponsion satis-ified Divine Justice for our Sins, or that he paid to God any thing which we owed for our Sins: But when he is said to have died for our Sins as they were laid on him, nothing else is meant, but that he died by occasion of our Sins, to take them away; that is, he died to reclaim us from our Sins, and to assure us, that if we did leave our Sins we should be forgiven; and besides this, that we might perceive and obtain the fruit of that Forgiveness, &c.
Socin. tom. ii. pag. 153. & tom. i. Praele&. Theol. cap. 18, 20. Crell. vol. iii.
Reps. ad Grot. cap. 9.

Truth. When it's said, Christ died for our Sins as being laid on him, it's not only to bring about the forementioned Ends, and such other Purposes as are assigned by the Socinians; but they were imputed to him as what he had for our Salvation engaged to make Satisfaction for; and he did by his death make a real, full, and proper Satisfaction to God's Justice, vindicating the honour of his Justice and Government, and of the violated Law as fully, as if the pardoned Sinner had endured the utmost Punishment threatned by the said Law.

Error 11. God did not inflict death on Christ our Mediator to express his hatred of Sin, and to deter us from it by his death
An End to Discord.

death as any instance of divine Displeasure against our Offences; and therefore our Sins were not punished in Christ. So-

Cin. tom. i. pag. 577, 578, 581. & tom. ii. pag. 194. Crell. vol. i. de morte Christi, pag. 611.

Truth. God did punish our Sins in the death of Christ, by shewing his real hatred against Sin in all the extremities Christ did endure; which extremities and death thus inflicted, were not only fit, but truly design'd, to deter us from all Disobedience, against which God thus testified his high Displeasure.

Truth. Christ by his death and obedience did properly merit our Salvation, and the Reconciliation of God to us; his death being to be considered, first as satisfactory, and then meritorious; and his obedience, first as meritorious, and then satisfactory.

Error 13. By Christ's dying for us, or in our stead, (as some of them sometimes word it, tho' they expressly dispute)
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. against it,) is not meant, that Christ was substituted to die in the room of us who were condemned to die, that God might be pacified; nor that his death was instead of our death, that we for the Merit of it might be delivered: But the meaning is, that Christ for our good did by his death come to be crowned with Glory and Power, whereby he is able to make us meet for Pardon, and is authorized to give that Pardon to us. Socin. Pæleæt. cap. 20, 21. & de Servat. cap. 8. Crell. Resp. ad Grot. cap. 9. par. 1, &c.

Truth. By Christ's dying for us, and in our stead, is meant, that whereas we Sinners were condemned to die for our Sins, our Lord Jesus, tho' he became not a Sinner in our stead, yet as Mediator, he was substituted to die in our stead, that by his death God might be inclined to forgive us who otherwise must have died; (and by virtue of his death, as a Satisfaction to Divine Justice, we are delivered from Death.) This Parenthesis I add to the description Grotius gives of Christ's dying in our stead: De Satisf. cap. 9.

Limborch's Opinion of Christ's Satisfaction, consonant to Episcopius and some few other Arminians.

Error 14. Vindictive Justice required not Satisfaction to be made, in order Truth. Vindictive Justice for the Honour of the divine Law required Satisfaction in order to the remission of Sin, at least after the enacting of Adam's Covenant.

Error 15. Christ's Sufferings were not a full Satisfaction to Justice, nor was the Price of our Redemption fully equivalent to the misery we deserved: But God might accept as a redeeming Price much or little as himself judged fit, and might be satisfied with any sort of Affliction laid on Christ: Nor did Christ satisfy the rigor of divine Justice, but the Will of God, considered as at once merciful as well as just; (that is, Mercy abated to Christ in the terms of Satisfaction, what Justice demanded.) Lib. iii. cap. 2. § 8, 9. cap. 22. § 2. cap. 23. § 6.

Truth. Tho' the great Mercy of God appeared in his being willing to admit, accept, and provide Christ our Mediator to make Satisfaction for our Sins; yet God our just Governor would have it, that the terms of Satisfaction proposed to our Mediator should be such, as strict Justice demanded for the honour of his violated Law, and securing the ends of his Government; which terms were no lower, than that he should suffer what was fully equivalent
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. Valent to the Punishments they whom he was to redeem deserved to endure: And as our Lord Jesus did suffer in kind much of what we deserved to suffer; so he suffered (considering the Dignity and Innocency of his Person,) what was in the intrinsick Value fully equivalent to such of our deserved Punishments, as he was not capable of suffering in kind. Nay, the Price of our Redemption paid by him, was not only equivalent to what the Law of Works required of us, but it was supra-legal, that is, far exceeded what any Sinners were thereby obliged to; nor see we how a full Satisfaction for all our Sins could be otherwise made.

Error 16. Our Faith and Regeneration were not merited by Christ. Lib. iii. cap. 22. §. 3.

Truth. Considering that our New-birth and Faith are the fruits of the holy Spirit, whom by Sin we had expelled, his Return to regenerate and make us believers must be for the sake and with respect to the Merits of Christ, as what vindicated the honour of God who restored him to us.

Truth. No Penance, Pilgrimage, Fastings, or good Works, of our own, or other men, can make proper Satisfaction to divine Justice for the least of our Sins, as to any part of their Fault or Guilt.
An End to Discord.

This last we add, in opposition to what Popish Opinions seem to militate against the Doctrine of Christ's Satisfaction.

Socinian Notions of Justification.

Error 1. In our Justification by Christ our Sins are blotted out, not by Christ's death and obedience as any Compensation or Satisfaction to God for them, but only by God's simple Forgiveness and Pardon, absolutely free in all respects, without any Merit of Christ's or our own. Socin. tom. i. Praelect. Theol. cap. 15, 16. Crell. vol. i. in Phil. iii. 9. & in Rom. iii. 24.

Truth. In Justification, upon our penitent believing our Sins are pardoned, and our Persons accepted for the sake of Christ's death and obedience, as what compensated and made Satisfaction for our Sins: And tho' neither our Graces nor Works do merit our Pardon, Acceptance, or eternal Life, yet these with all other saving Benefits were merited by Christ.

Note, The Socinians are as much for absolutely unlimited free Grace, as even our Antinomians would pretend to be, if not more.

Error 2. Faith in Christ is accepted under the Gospel as a perfect Righteousness, for a perfect sinless Obedience: And as this Faith expresseth itself in our Works,
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. our Justification is in itself firmer and surer.

V. Crell. vol. i. pag. 110, 612, 613, 474.

Truth 1. Tho' true Faith be a Gospel-Righteousness, yet it is not accepted for sinless Obedience; nor doth the Gospel entitle us to Salvation upon our believing, as the Law entitled us to Life as of Debt for our Obedience, as the immediate Merit of that Reward by the adjustment of governing Justice; whereas the Gospel of mere Grace (tho' in a way of Government,) entitles the Believer to Life, as what was merited by the Lord Jesus, and not by our Faith or Works.

Truth. 2. Tho' a dead Faith cannot justify us, and our believing Consent must be executed if we survive it; yet are we as truly and firmly justified, and in Christ's Right entitled to Glory, when we first believe, as when those genuine Fruits of it are produced, which are contrary to that Barrenness, Ungodliness, and Apostacy that would subject us to Condemnation.

We shall also provide against Limborch's and some other Arminians Notion of justification; tho' it be none of the five Points which constitute Arminianism, and in the former Papers we have opposed each of the said Points, in concurrence with our British Divines in the Synod of Dort.

Error 3. By Faith being imputed for Righteousness, Righteousness, is meant, that God graciously for Christ's sake will account our Obedience which we yield him by Faith as if it were perfect, tho' it be imperfect: As if a Creditor having a Debtor who owes him 1000 Gilders, should upon this Debtor's paying him 100, forgive him the rest, and graciously impute to him this part of payment for the payment of the whole. Lib. vi. cap. 4. §. 39.

Truth. Tho' we are justified by Christ believed on, and Faith in him be accounted a Gospel-Righteousness, as it is the performed Condition upon which we are by the Gospel-Promise adjudged to have the Righteousness of Christ imputed to us as our pleadable Security against the curse of the Law; by which Righteousness of Christ alone, our Right to Pardon and eternal Life (wherein we are personally vested by the Gospel,) is merited, as well as the Blessings themselves: Nevertheless our Faith in Christ is no part of the Debt we owed to God by the Law of Innocency; nor is it, or our sincere Obedience proceeding from it, either in themselves, or by divine acceptance, a full Conformity to the Gospel-Precepts; much less doth God impute to us this Faith, or that Obedience, for the payment of the whole Debt owing by the Law or Gospel, tho' he grant us thereupon that Pardon, Favour, and Acceptance, Christ hath procured, so as to deal

he doth not suspend, until Faith produceth the said Fruit of Obedience, but grants them upon our first true purpose to turn from Sin to God, and our acceptance of and trust in Christ for doing this, and for obtaining all Salvation by him.

We shall next add the common Popish Notion of Justification, as stated by Andadius in his authorized Explication of the Decree of the VIth Session of the Council of Trent; whereto Bellarmine, and the generality of the Papists agree.

Error 4. The first Justification is the Renovation of an ungodly Man by the infused habit of Love, the infusion of which is merited by Christ. The second Justification is this habit of Love producing good Works, by the Merit whereof we are further justified, and ex condigno deserve eternal Life. But neither the first nor second Justification consists in the forgiveness of Sin.

Note, By preparatory Works the Council intend with the School-men, that our Wills moved by the Spirit do by their natural Power prepare themselves to obtain the habit of Grace, and ex congruo, merit the infusion of it; which Habit is that justifying Righteousness, for the Merit whereof the Sinner is at first absolved from Guilt, and accepted to eternal Life.

Truth 1. Neither this first nor second Justification is the Justification described usually in the Gospel, which is not the Conversion of a Sinner, or the progressive Holiness of a Convert, but a forensick Act, viz. God's judicial absolving us from the Curse due for Sin, and adjudging us entitled to Glory for the Merits of Christ, according to the Gospel.

Truth 2. It is not true, that preparatory Works do any way deserve from God the habit of Grace at first infused, tho' ordinarily the Divine Spirit doth by knowledge and humbling convictions abate the Obstacles to Grace in our Hearts, and put us upon seeking help from Christ; all which are as truly owing to his more common Operations, as saving Grace is to his special.

Truth 3. Neither the first infused Habit of Grace, nor its Acts, do merit further Grace or Holiness; nor yet any degree of that Pardon or Acceptance, which by divine ordination ensue thereupon.

Error 5. Christ hath merited, that the Habit of Love should by its virtue extinguish Sin in us by good Works, and we by these Works merit Reconciliation with God, Forgiveness of Sin, and eternal Glory, as what do appease his Anger, satisfy
Peace with Truth; or

CHAP. satisfy for our Guilt, and are part of the V. Price of eternal Glory.

Note, The Papist Error concerning Satisfaction leads them to this Error about Justification; and when Justification is considered in a Protestant sense, viz. as a forensic Act, the true Controversy between the Papists and us is about the Doctrine of the Merit of good Works.

Truth. Neither Repentance, Faith, Love, nor any good Work proceeding therefrom, do in the least merit Reconciliation, Pardon, or eternal Life; neither did Christ merit, that we might merit: But Reconciliation, Pardon, and eternal Life were merited only by Christ's atoning, satisfying, and meriting Sufferings and Obedience: And therefore the Righteousness of Christ is accepted and reputed the only meriting Righteousness in God's justifying Act, altho' this Act terminates on none (adult) besides the penitent Believer, and on all such by the Ordination of the Gospel.

Note, (1.) It is one thing, for Christ to merit, that we might by our Works merit Salvation: It is another thing, for Christ to merit that Salvation itself, which he gives and applies to men on Gospel-terms: The first is Papist, the last is Protestant Doctrine. (2.) It is one thing, what our Judge in his justifying Act accounts to be the thing, which appeaseth his his Anger (for Reconciliation,) makes Compensation to Justice (for Pardon,) and is the meriting Price (of eternal Life;) to which Reconciliation, Pardon, and eternal Life he now adjudgeth the penitent Believer to be entitled: Now the thing which our Judge accounts to be that, which appeaseth his Anger, &c. is the Righteousness of Christ, and only that. But then, it is another matter, whom our Judge in his justifying Act accounts and adjudgeth in conformity to the Gospel-Offer, to be the Persons who he therein promised should be actually reconciled, pardoned, and entitled to Glory, in the alone meriting virtue of what appeased his Anger, made amends for Sin, and was the Price of Glory. Now this Person is the penitent Believer; and he is accounted to be such, from his having Gospel-Faith in Christ, with true Repentance; and as such is adjudged to be under the favour of the foresaid Gospel-Promise of Reconciliation, Pardon, and Glory; which yet are procured and merited, not by his Faith, but by Christ's alone Righteousness, (as before accounted for,) and are obtained in his Right, who as well had these promised to him for Believers in the Covenant of Redemption, as they are promised by God in Christ in the Gospel to Believers themselves, for a personal Title to possess them, and to plead the Merits of Christ for the enjoyment of them.

And tho' the Vindication of ourselves in this matter be needless, when our Principles and Practice are so well known; and it's so notorious, that of the great number of unqualified Men who are of late turned Preachers, those very few who broke out of any of our Congregations in this City, received no Approval or Countenance from us; and to avoid Restraint and Discouragement they renounced the Name of Presbyterians, yea, preached against us; yet to support what we can this present Testimony of our Congregational Brethren, we'll publish one of the Articles agreed to by all of us for strengthening our Union after our said Brethren's Recess, which is as follows,

Some further Examination what is Socinianism, as to the Doctrine of Christ’s Satisfaction, and what is not so; with a brief account of several Phrases used by Socinians and by the Orthodox in a very contrary sense.

A STRICT Observation in how CHAP. uncertain a sense Terms and Phrases VI. are made use of, must convince one, that Errors may be easily concealed from the Ignorant, and the Orthodox as easily impeached without ground, by crafty Persons who design imposing on the Vulgar. I shall give an Instance in the Controversy before me, which makes it evident, that Men’s Explications and main Hypothesis must be regarded above words, otherwise their sense will be mistaken.

They assign Christ's Death to God's mere Dominion over him as his entire Creature, whom he would reward for it, tho' not as merited (i). (2.) It was an Example of Patience (k). (3.) It was a Preparation of his Sacrifice to be offered to God in Heaven for our Sins (l). (4.) It shew'd how much he desired our Salvation, tho' such great Sinners, and how faithful he would be in expiating our Sins in Heaven, when he endured such dreadful things for our sakes; which God would have chiefly considered in our High-Priest (m). (5.) His Death impressed a tender Affection and Pity towards us, that so he would succour us who were to be so extremly afflicted: God would not have put Mankind in his hands, unless he first suffered Death for Sinners: And that God might render us more assured, that if we obeyed we should have eternal Life, Christ should be so fashioned, that in a sense it should appear, Christ had more Tenderness for us than mised to induce us to repent, than there were before (r). (10.) To take away those greater Sins, which the legal Sacrifices were not appointed for (s). (11.) To beget in us a firm hope of Life, tho' we should die as terrible a Death (t). (12.) That we might not fear Death, or the Curse, which we see conquered by him (u). (13.) That we might be induced to leave our Sin, when he died that we might be reclaimed from it by fuch hope of Par-

[3.] As they limit Christ's Death in this manner, exclusively of and in opposition to other Causes and Ends, which the proper Satisfaction of Christ more directly supposeth, (as you see in the fifth Chapter:) So I could easily shew, how they dilute their own seeming Concessions, as well as reduce plain Scripture-expressions to that Insignificance, that no man can hope by their method to apprehend any kind of words with certainty as to their meaning. One while, an as if (a quafi) is all they intend by their large Grants; " as if a redeeming Price, &c. God is " as it were moved, and as it were obliged " by Christ to pardon us:" Another while, all is figurative, as a metaphorical Redemption; " Christ's Death was an expi-" atory Sacrifice, that is, metonymically " and synecdochically called so; and it " chiefly signifies, what by God's Decree " followed upon it, viz. his Entrance in-" " to Heaven." Many more might be heaped of this kind. Socin. de Servat. par. 2. cap. 2. Crell. vol. i. in Rom. iii. 24. vol. iii. Resp. ad Grot. cap. 8. par. 3. F 3 pag.

Peace with Truth; or

VI. [4.] They sometimes state the difference between themselves and others; and there are some things which they still adhere to, and secure; however they perplex this Controversy with their seeming Grants and equivocal Expressions.

(i.) Socinus states this Question, and denies it: "Are our Sins blotted out by any Compensation or Satisfaction, or else by Forgiveness? Most think they are blotted out, a Satisfaction intervening; but we think they are blotted out by simple Forgiveness, or a Pardon absolutely free." Praeleg. cap. 15. pag. 565.

He also states the Difference with Coet, and puts this for the Position held by his own Party. "I judge and think this to be the Orthodox Determination, That Jesus Christ is therefore our Saviour, because he has made known to us the way of eternal Life; and in his own Person, both by the Example of his Life, and by his rising from the dead, hath given assurance of it, and made it evident; as also, that he will give eternal Life to us who believe him. But I affirm, that he neither satisfied Divine Justice, by which we Sinners did deserve to be damned; nor was there any need that he should satisfy it." Socin. tom. ii. de Servat. cap. i. pag. 121.

Creplius states this Question; "Did
"Did the Redemption wrought by Christ include his Payment of a true Price to God for our Sins, which he calls Satisfaction?" Resp. ad Grot. cap. 8. This he denies: And he and others of them take great advantage of Covet's making use of Creditor, Debtor, and Debt, to express their Judgment in this Controversy. Other Instances might be given.

(2.) The principal things they adhere to are, "1. That Christ did not appease God's Anger towards Sinners. 2. That what Christ did and suffered had no merit Virtue, and so did not merit from God our Pardon, Acceptance and eternal Life, or properly move God to give or promise them." These are the Heart of Socinianism as to the Satisfaction of Christ; and they do exclude what Christ performs in Heaven, as well as his Death on Earth, from any proper influence God-ward as to these things; tho' to effect what they call Expiation, they ascribe more to Christ's abiding on God's Right-hand taking care of the Church, than to his Resurrection, and more to his Resurrection than to his Death; these two last being but the decreed intervening way of coming to the other, which they call the Expiation itself. Hence they always deny any proper redeeming Price, and say, "God quitted his Right to punish us without any respect to Christ;" and
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. distinguish in their account of Expiation VI. on God's part, which they call his own Act; and on our part, which is, say they, Christ's giving us eternal Life; wherein is contained a full deliverance from the Punishment of Sin. As to Expiation on God's part, that's in no wise by Christ's inclining God to forgive our Sins by his Sacrifice; yea, Socinus tells us, "God alone expiates Sin." And when Crellius blames Grotius, for making Socinus to confine the Efficacy of Christ's Sacrifice to Sins future for Prevention or Pardon, and excluding the Forgiveness of Sins past, otherwise than as it begets Faith, and so turns us from Sin; What greater expiating Virtue doth he ascribe to it, under the notion of an expiating Sacrifice? it's this, "It takes away the Guilt and Punishment of all Sins, the past before Conversion, and however great:" But how, and wherein? He answers, "It's partly by declaring and granting us a Right to that thing, and partly by actually taking away Divine Punishments." But is that Right, or Pardon, at all properly procured by this Sacrifice? No, by no means; that he had denied, and abides by the Denial here, and in the following Sections. The sum is; "A crucified Saviour's being exalted, and in Heaven taking care of our Salvation, assures us, that we shall be partakers of the Pardon appointed and

and promised before, by the mere Mercy of God, without respect to Christ; VI.

and Christ as the authorized Sponsor on God's part conveys it, and assisted with the Divine Power fully removes the Punishment, or rather God himself doth it." Nay, by their Scheme you cannot well see, that they allow less expiating Virtue to Men's Prayers, than to the legal Sacrifices, yea, or to the yearly; for, say they, "we expiate our own Sins by those Prayers," and scarce more to Christ's Sacrifice, than to the Legal, except as to more sorts of Sin, and its greater aptness to dissuade us from Sin, by the Love of God, and strong grounds of hopes of higher Rewards, being more evidenced and asured by this Sacrifice of Christ, than by those of the Law: "For this Sacrifice of Christ is no other than an intervening Means, which being performed, that Discharge follows by the Divine Decree, which the self-inclined God, unmoved by any thing Christ was to do or suffer, resolved freely to bestow of his mere Mercy."

To add no more, they carefully distinguish between the Impetration of Pardon, &c. with respect to the Divine Will, and the means of the Application of that Pardon to the Sinner. From the former they exclude Christ's Satisfaction and Merits, and confine their Virtue altogether to the latter:
Peace with Truth; or

CHAP. VI. latter. The thing itself is unprocured, as from God; the Sinner's obtaining it is subserved by Christ, by what he performs to make us meet for it, and to possess us in the Effects of it according to the way decreed, and that only because decreed. So-ad Grot. cap. 8, 9, 10.

[5.] IT is very obvious, that the Socinian Controversy lies not in those things, wherein some are induced to place them, because of certain Phrases sometimes occurring in Debates concerning the Doctrine of Christ's Satisfaction. To instance in a few.

(1.) IT is not, whether the Sufferings of a Sponsor in the stead of the Sinner, be in so strict a sense a proper Punishment, as the Sufferings of the Delinquent himself would be? This is nothing with them; for their Question is, "Were Christ's Sufferings such an Instance of God's rectoral "Hatred against our Sins, and Anger against Sinners, as that thereby the Honour of his Justice, and of his injured "Government and Law, was provided "for and vindicated, and Sinners were to "be deterred from Sin by God's insisting "upon such a penal Compensation, before he would be reconciled to us?" Punishment under this notion they expressly dispute against.

(2.) Nor
Nor is it about the Phrase, Com-Chap. mutation of Persons between Christ and Sinners: For this they grant; and admit a Surrogation of the typical Sacrifice instead of the Sinner, and a Substitution of Christ in our place. Their point depends not on any such mere words. But, "was Christ appointed, and did he consent, to endure what the Sinner was to suffer, that in virtue thereof the offended God might be appeased, and the Sinner delivered?" This is the thing they oppose. See Crel. Resp. ad Grot. cap. 9. par. 14. explaining this very Phrase.

Nor is it with them the Question, Whether Christ's Sufferings were in part the Idem, and in other respects a full Equivalent to the Punishments the Sinner deserved? No, their Arguments run against the Equivalency; and on that account they deny, that his Sufferings could be a full Price of Redemption, or a Satisfaction; and well they may, when they call him a mere Creature. Crel. Resp. ad Grot. cap. 4. par. 2. & cap. 6. par. 18. It's the Proportion in the Value, they most directly militate against.

Nor is it, Whether Christ was a Sinner in judicial Esteem, or was he reputed the innocent Mediator making amends to Justice for our Sins, that we the Offenders might be redeemed by his merits, who, to make Satisfaction, submitted to be dealt
The last is enough for their Abhorrence; and tho' Socinus took all advantages to expose the Orthodox, in representing their Opinion as to the Imputation of Sin to Christ, yet he grants, they hold that Christ was truly innocent, and was reputed so by God even when he was punished as if an Offender. De Servat. cap. 6. It's true, sometimes they would force some such Consequence on the words of the Orthodox, as if Christ must be legally reputed a Sinner; but that is to furnish themselves with an Argument to ridicule the true Doctrine of Satisfaction. And note, they deny, that 2 Cor. v. 21. Christ was made Sin, is to be understood, that Christ was made a Sacrifice for Sin; yea, some render it, he was made a Sinner, as Slichtingius, &c. and that God dealt with him as a Sinner. Socin. in loc.

(5.) It is far enough from the Socinian Controversy, Whether Christ was immediately obliged by the Law of works to die? that is, Did God thus sentence him, "Thou Christ hast sinned, and therefore thou shalt die?" Or, was he immediately obliged to die by the Covenant of Redemption, and mediately by the Law of works? that is, Is the Sentence to be thus apprehended? "Whereas thou my Son, the Mediator, hast with my Consent, declared thy willingness to expiate Sin, and and ransom Sinners, justly condemned. Chap.
by the Curse of my Law to die; and whereas my vindictive justice, the Ho-

our of my Law and Government, required, that I the Rector should exact Satisfaction and Reparation for the crimes of these Sinners by thy Death, if I agreed to thy redeeming and saving them, and thou hast obliged thy-sel to die in their stead to redeem them, therefore thou shalt die this accursed, shameful Death.” This, I say, is no part of the Dispute with the Socin-nians: For the last account doth as directly oppose their Notions as the former, nay much more; for it asserts the Compact before his Incarnation, and consequently the Divinity, or at least the Pre-existence of Christ.

(6.) Nor yet is it of any moment with them, whether men say, Sin would be in a more proper sense the immediate meritorious Cause of the Sinner’s dying who committed the Sin, than of Christ’s dying who did not commit the Sin, tho’ he obliged himself to make Satisfaction for it in the Sinner’s stead, that the provoked God might be reconciled to him. The Point with them being this, Did our Sins, notwithstanding God’s merciful disposition, retain that Demerit in his account, as rendered Satisfaction for Sin by Death necessary to reconcile him to Sinners? and consequently
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. frequently did Christ suffer Death, to make VI. that Satisfaction, which was become thus necessary by Sin, and yet impossible for the Sinner to make?

(7.) It is true, the Socinians usually say, "Our Sins were the occasion of Christ's Death:" Yet oft they call them the antecedent Cause; but occasion being more common and agreeable to their Hypothesis, I wish others had waved that word to prevent Abuse. Nevertheless the mere using of that word is far from arguing any man to Socinianize, so that he apply it to a sense opposite to what Socinians do. This will appear, if we consider in what sense the Socinians use it: They say, "Our Sin was an occasion of Christ's Death, as Sin was that which we were to be reclaimed from, and our hope supported against: And the Death of Christ was that way, in which God, who was not unreconciled before, did appoint Christ to reclaim us from our Sins; as his Death assureth us of the Truth of his Doctrine and Promises, and manifesteth God's prior Reconciliation; and so his Death became an Argument to incline us to believe and repent, and also a Causa sine qua non, both of a strong Motive to Holiness, viz. the endless Glory designed in Heaven for us, (which was before shut up,) and of that Power, Authority, and Care of Christ at God's Right-"Right-hand, to bring us into the Pofseffion of it." But when others shall call our Sins an occasion of Christ's Death, and explain it thus; "That it was an occasion of Christ's Death as a penal Satisfaction to the Justice of God, and that he endured it to pacify God to Sin-ers; that God's hatred of Sin, and his Justice (yea punitive Justice) might be no less demonstrated in Christ's Satisfaction, than if the Sinners had been damned; and his Obedience, and his Punishments, wherein vindictive Justice was thus glorified, did merit the Pardon of our Sins, and eternal Life:" Such anExplication doth as much oppose Socinianism, as if they had used the word meritorious Cause, instead of occasion.

THAT no Person may pretend the Reverend Mr. Baxter's Authority in favour of Socinianism, because he sometimes calls our Sins an occasion of Christ's Death; I do assure the Reader, that he explains the word occasion in the last sense, and in the most direct opposition to Socinianism: Nor can any pretend, but that the reason of his using this word, as also pro causâ meritoriâ, (or instead of a meritorious Cause,) is only to distinguish Christ the Sponsor making Satisfaction to Justice for our Sins, from the Sinner himself, when suffering for his own Sins. To evidence which, I have
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. have repeated his own Assertions under this VII. seventh Head; and could easily cite his own words, which exactly agree to what is Anti-focinian in the six foregoing Heads. See Method. Theolog. par. iii. cap. 1. detterm. 11, 12, 15.

Need I add that he says, "God declared to the feeling of Christ his Displeasure against Sin, which was the Cause of all the Miseries which he endured;

that is, (faith he,) Christ bare those Punishments, which the Anger and Displeasure of God against Sin and Sinners caused to be inflicted on him our Sponfor; (ubi sup. Disp. 4.) and all this in our stead. (Determ. 10.) He made Satisfaction for our Sins, to God as Rector, and as the injured Party: (Determ.

14.) Christ's Death answered all the Ends of the most proper Punishments, and of the Threatning of the Law. (De-term. 12.)" When he calls Sin an occasion of Christ's Death, he there calls it also "a remote meritorious Cause; and "so far a proper meritorious Cause, as "when Children are punished for their Parents Sins: (Determ. 5.) His Satisfaction yielded to our most just Rector a sufficient ground, on which to forgive penitent Believers spiritual and eternal Punishments: (Disp. 2.) Nay, he sees "not, supposing the Law of works, how "God could forgive our Sins without the "penal penal Satisfaction of Christ. (Disp. 2. CHAP. VI. & Determ. 15.) It were endless to produce the Instances demonstrating the Orthodoxy of this great Man, as to the Satisfaction of Christ, against Socinianism. And by the way, such as say Christ’s penal Satisfaction was not necessary to the forgiveness of our Sins, do a thousand times more favour Socinianism, than Mr. Baxter’s notions or words can be wrested to.

Perhaps others who follow Episcopius, and some other Arminians, (when all must acquit him of Socinianism,) may surmise, he favoureth their notion of Christ’s Death, as if it were a Satisfaction only to the Will of God, and not a full Satisfaction to the Justice of God. To this I answer, Mr. Baxter distinguisheth Satisfaction into that which is the fulfilling the Will of a Person, and that which is the Payment of what was owing by an Equivalent otherwise not due. And he affirms, “that Christ’s Satisfaction was not a mere fulfilling the Will of God, (tho’ it supposeth his Consent;) but it was a full Equivalent to what Punishments we deserved, in that it better answered the Ends of Divine Government, than the Sinner’s Punishment would have done; it more fully demonstrated the vindictive Justice of God, than if the Sinner had been damned; and it was a full Satisfaction to governing Justice, and the End of the G Law.”
Peace with Truth; or

I thought this account necessary, not only for the forementioned End, but also that our Agreement in opposition to Socinianism might not exclude Mr. Baxter, and such as approve of his Scheme; which would add strength to that Heresy, and be injurious to many worthy Persons. Nor ought a few words so fully explained be pressed to brand them with that odious Title, who could more plausibly fix the same Character on Persons, from things plainly asserted in the Socinian sense, and subserving their Hypothec: As, "that Christ's Death was not necessary to the remission of Sin; that the Promise of Forgiveness is no Effect of Christ's Death; that Repentance under the Gospel is an Effect of justifying Faith in Christ; and that the preaching of Reconciliation to Sinners, is only to publish to them that God is already reconciled to them, and to call them to be reconciled to God." Many others might be instanced; but I think it were unjust, even upon such grounds, to call any of these Socinians.
C H A P. VII.

An Enquiry into what Difference seems to remain concerning the Satisfaction of Christ, and the Justification of a Sinner; and this Difference reduced below any Cause of Discord.

I think both Sides are acquitted from all dangerous Errors concerning the Satisfaction of Christ, and the Justification of a Sinner: Nor can I doubt, but the impartial Reader must apprehend the remaining Difference doth not lie in Opinions about these Doctrines themselves, but in accommodating some words in opposition to other Errors which either Side have more especially applied their minds to confute; unless he should also ascribe it to a Zeal for sundry received Phrases on the one part, and an apprehension on the other part, that more accuracy is become needful since those Phrases were received. On the whole, it appears,

I. That in both these Doctrines, the visible
Peace with Truth; or

Chapter VII. visible Spring of what Difference remains is a different notion of Christ's Suretyship.

For by this, the word Imputation, as used in both these Doctrines, is governed, viz. how our Sins were imputed to Christ when he satisfied, and how Christ's Righteousness is imputed to us when we are justified: Both which depend upon the various Conceptions of the Suretyship of Christ, and the manner of his representing us, which I will now begin with.

The one Side think him a mediating Surety; and distinguishing, both as to the matter engaged, and the Instrument wherein he voluntarily engaged himself, as also with relation to the Respect he had to us therein,

1. They consider Christ in the Covenant of Redemption, as agreeing with his Father the terms of Satisfaction to Justice, and Impetration of Life for Sinners, and obliging himself to assume our Nature, and therein perfectly to obey the Law, and to die an accursed Death, with whatever was equivalent to what by the Covenant of works our Sins deserved. Here they think Christ did not covenant strictly in our stead, or as our Proxy, tho' he covenanted to die in our stead, even strictly so: He transferred as a free Interposer, tho' for our Salvation; we were no federating Party, tho' we were the Persons whose Salvation was his promised Reward? And therefore we have have more Reason, since we are become Members, to say we intercede in Christ now, than to say that we covenanted in Christ then. Finally, they account his Act of engaging so peculiar to himself, that his non-performance of what he engaged, (which was impossible,) had not made us more guilty, tho' it would have left us miserable for our own Sins, there being no other way to redeem us.

2. They find Christ called a Surety in the Gospel-Covenant made with fallen Man, Heb. vii. 22. and no where else. This Covenant supposeth the former, yea supposeth Christ's having executed his Engagements by the Covenant of Redemption to make Satisfaction to Justice; (that is, it was at first accepted as if executed;) for this Covenant with Man doth not adjust the terms of Redemption, but the way of conveying the Effects of that Redemption; and is called the Testament of our Lord Jesus, whereby he bequeaths the Blessings he acquired by his atoning Death. In this Covenant Christ is such a Surety, as not only assurs us all will be performed which is promis'd to us on God's part, but also undertakes to bring in the Elect, and to secure the Perseverance of Believers unto eternal Life, by his exerting that power and authority he has received. But here also they apprehend Christ a distinct federating Party; a Mediator, treating and obliging himself himself to make the Covenant stand sure, and to effect the Ends it was designed for:

But he binds not himself to believe, repent, or persevere for us; but that we shall repent, believe, and persevere: Nor doth his Engagement that we should do so, prevent our personal Engagement by Covenant to do it ourselves, tho' in his Strength. Now our Act of engaging is not his engaging Act, but an Effect of it; nor is our repenting his repenting Act, but the Effect of his engaged Assistance; nor is that Assistance of his reckoned to be legally our assisting ourselves; nor can we say, that we covenanted in Christ to bring in the Elect, or that Believers shall persevere. By which, with other Reasons, we are induced to think, that in covenanting he transacts still as Mediator; but by obliging himself to these great Performances, in order to our doing what we are personally obliged to do, and our receiving what we are necessitated to receive, if ever we be saved even in a Gospel-way, (tho' it supposeth him already crucified,) he is properly called a Surety of the new Covenant, yet still connoting him a Mediator.

I need not suggest, that if in this new Covenant Christ's Suretyship will not infer our being one federating Party with Christ, and hence that we covenanted in him; it will far less follow, that we did so in the Covenant of Redemption, which treated of things things so improper to be once propos'd to us as undertaking Parties, much less as Principals, which to strictly legal Sureties always are suppos'd. But of this I have treated in Man made righteous, and in Answer to the Report, and in the Postscript to Gospel-Truth.

The other Side think, that Christ, with the Father's consent, came into the Covenant of works, considered as a Bond, (as unviolated, say some, as violated, say others,) and therein became one federating Party with us, (as Elect some say, as Believers say others,) even such a Surety as made the Covenant of works run thus: "If thou "Christ my Son, or you the Elect (or "Believers,) do obey all the Law, you "shall live: But if they sin, thou or they "shall die; or they having sinned, thou "shall die." And conceiving Christ to be as a strict pecuniary Surety in this one Bond with us, they esteem him one legal Person and Representative in such a sense, as that we did covenant in him, and are legally esteemed to do and suffer what he did, and not only secured of Salvation in his right, and for his sake.

This may be accounted by some a dangerous Difference. And so it were on our part, if we did not own, that Christ's fulfilling of the Law was an Article in the Covenant of Redemption; and that we are as fully assured of Salvation, if we accept of Christ, as if we had covenanted in him; and that he hath engaged the Elect should accept of him, though they did not covenant in him; and that Believers have as inviolable an Interest in the Benefits of Christ's Death, both in his right and by the Gospel-promise, as if they were legally esteemed to suffer what he did suffer: But all this we acknowledge. It would be as dangerous on our Brethren's part to say, that we covenanted in Christ and obeyed in him, if they did not renounce all proud assuming Boasts, as if they were as righteous as Christ, or as if they stood on terms with God, needing no more Acts of Mercy than that one of appointing Christ to be Mediator, being after that on terms of strict Justice, and above Forgiveness, &c. The like Danger would ensue from their Position, if they did not acknowledge the necessity of Faith to Justification, and this Faith to be always accompanied with Repentance and persevering Holiness. But our Brethren renounce the former, and own the latter.

Matters standing thus, will afford no ground to hereticate each other. We think, a mediating Surety obliged in a distinct Bond to perform the utmost which our Brethren affirm Christ to have done, doth as well secure our State, and support our Faith, as if in the same Bond; and doth better account for the sapiential methods of Divine Government towards man since the Fall,
An End to Discord.

Fall, with God’s judicial Procedures to-wards man as under Gospel-offers, and his suspending Christ’s merited Benefits till men believe, as also for his recorded Pleadings with Sinners. Our Brethren think, not that Christ did more for our Salvation than we allow, but that we did more in Christ; and thence judge our Faith more supported, and the Law of works more honoured in their way. But did each Side perceive all the aforesaid respective Ends alike provided for, and evil Consequences equally avoided, the Notion in debate could for its own sake admit no Dispute on either Side. And is it not pity to hate each other for mistaking the best Scheme, to avoid the same Evils which both would prevent, and secure that same Good which both honestly aim at by their respective Hypotheses?

Forbearance is the jufier in this point, because it turns upon a Solution of this Question; When Adam is called a Figure of Christ, (Rom. v. 14.) is there not some disparity in their Representation of men, as well as in those other things there instanced? Our Brethren think Christ so fully prefigured by Adam as a Representative, that we as truly obeyed and suffered in Christ, as we sinned in Adam. We think the Figure, as to Representation, is to be explained thus: As no man becomes a Sinner, or dieth, whose depravedness and death were not procured and merited by Adam’s first

Chap. first Sin; and tho' the Pagan Sinners who VII. died, did not actually sin against a revealed positive Law, as Adam did, yet he was the Root of Death to them, as well as to the Jews under Moses's Law: So no men are quickned, justified, sanctified, or saved, but Christ is a Root of Life, Grace, Justification, Holiness, and Glory to them, (in all these by his Merits, in some also by his Spirit and Power.)

But yet we conceive Christ may as well answer Adam's Figure here intended, by our being quickned, justified, and saved by Christ's Obedience imputed to us, without our being esteemed to have obeyed and suffered in him; as Christ was condemned and died for Adam's Sin imputed to him, tho' he was not esteemed to have sinned in Adam. As he was condemned by our Disobedience, so we are justified by his Obedience, viz. the first by his own Compact with the Father, the last by that and the Gospel too: He was not condemned by any Imputation that made him by the Law a Sinner, as having sinned in Adam; neither are we justified by being legally judged Sufferers or Obeyers in him. It avails not to say, Christ was legally a Sinner, and yet not reputed to sin in Adam, because Christ was our Root: For tho' he was our Root as to Grace, Acceptance, Pardon and Glory, and whatever else did proceed from him to us, as our Saviour; nevertheless, if he was a Sinner, he he could not as to this be our Root, unless we derive Sin from him: But surely that Denomination must have its Root, not in him, but in those that were Sinners before him, and whose Sins were imputed to him: They must denominate that one legal Person into which he came, a sinful guilty Person; as he doth that one obeying, satisfying Person, into which we are admitted: (Which terms I argue from, as espoused by our Brethren.)

Finally, we are inclined to set the foresaid Limit to Christ's Representation, by this among many other Reasons; that in Rom. v. 14. where Adam is called a Figure, the Death of those Heathens was merited by their own personal Transgressions, as well as by Adam's Disobedience: But the Elect, even when Believers, do not merit Life by their own personal Obedience; and therefore we are not represented altogether in the same manner in Christ as in Adam. And now,

II. From the former, another point ariseth, referring expressly to the Satisfaction, viz. In what sense our Sins were imputed to Christ.

The one Side say, our Sins were imputed to Christ, only as to Guilt, or Obligation to bear the Punishments which we deserved for them; which punishments tho' he obliged himself to endure in our
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. VII. stead to reconcile God to us, yet that did not render him a Sinner in God's account; because that Title results from the violation of the Precept, abstractedly from a respect to the threatening: And conceiving he was not a Sinner in our stead, tho' he suffer'd in our stead the punishments due to our sins, they think he was esteemed by God what in truth he was, viz. the holy, innocent Mediator, punishable by his own consent for the Sins which he came to expiate, and which were not expiable without his dying in our stead.

But our Brethren think, our Sins were so imputed to Christ, as to give him the denomination and judicial acceptance of a Sinner in the esteem of God and the Law.

Yet left the difference should appear greater than it is, it's fit I inform you, on the one hand, that our Brethren deny, that Christ had any Sin or Desilement in him, or had any Sin of his own; they were our Sins, only imputed to him; and he was a legal Sinner by being one political Person with those Sinners, whom the Law esteemed real Sinners, and condemned as such. On the other hand, we own, that (supposing the Covenant of Redemption,) he was as truly obliged, and God the just Rector at as full liberty to punish him for our Sins, as if he had been reputed a Sinner: Nay, Divine Justice required the inflicting thofe those punishments on him, if the Sinner was to be redeemed from them for his sake.

Now, Reader, can this difference justify mutual Censures or Alienation? What is a Sinner without Filth, yea or any Fault of his own, above a Sponsor obliged to bear the punishments of other men's Sins in the stead of the Offenders? And they who acknowledge him to be this, what less say they of him, than the others mean, tho' scrupulous of that harsher Denomination? At least it would appear strange to revile each other for a different explication of that Text, 2 Cor. v. 21. He was made Sin for us. The one Side think, he was made a Sacrifice for Sin, after the Hebrew custom: For we find very oft the words סinned and נמלך to signify a Sin-Offering as well as Sin: Lev. vii. 1, 2. and iv. 28, 29, 33. And this very Apostle follows the same usage, expressing an Offering or Sacrifice for Sin by the Phrase πεπαγιλας: Rom. viii. 3. Heb. x. 6. The other Side will have it meant, that Christ was made a Sinner, but a Sinner that is holy, unfiled, and never offended; which notion of being made Sin is too diminutive, to admit harsh thoughts of such as entertain it.

An unconcerned Observer will be apt to say, These who call Christ a Sinner are intent to renounce Socinianism; and they who call him a Sacrifice for Sin, are as solicitous to confute Socinianism and Antinomianism.
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. mianism too, by withholding an advantage — of that word. But where's the Christian Charity or Prudence of the condemning Side, when both contend for what seems the best defence of the Doctrine of Satisfaction? The other Phrases accounted for in the Sixth Chapter, admit the same mitigation as this, and upon the same grounds.

III. The third point wherein there apppears some difference, refers to the Doctrine of Justification. But before I insist on this, permit me to offer a few hints.

1. The Difference in this matter seems to proceed from the want of an equal consideration, of the Covenant of Redemption, which fixed the terms of Satisfaction, and Impetration of saving Benefits, which Christ alone was thereby obliged to perform; and of the Gospel-Covenant, wherein the method of giving us a personal Interest in the Blessings impet rated by Christ is ordained. By the former, all that belongs to Satisfaction and Merit are confined to Christ, and Pard-don, Adoption, and eternal Life are put in the hand of our Saviour as his Reward.
By the latter, a way becoming our fallen State and rational Nature is appointed, to apply to us a Right to the purchased Blessings; nor can the Scripture-account of God's Calls, Pleadings, and judicial Proceedings, ceedings, be explained without it. I think the not distinguishing these two Covenants, or fixing the mind upon either of them with too little regard to the other, contribute much to our Debates.

2. With Humility I propose to con-ideration, Whether such can dangerously err as to the way of Salvation, and particularly in the Doctrine of Justification, who do honestly adhere to our foregoing account of Christ's Satisfaction; and in subordination thereto, assert a Gospel-Law or Covenant, wherein is enacted a Rule by which the saving Effects of that Satisfaction are given forth? It seems to me highly improbable. For in the account given of Satisfaction, we ascribe the whole Impetra-tion of Pardon, Acceptance, and all saving Benefits, only to the Atonement and Merits of Christ, expressly excluding all our own Graces and good Works from the least place therein: And by our Judgment of the Gospel-Law, we secure the Method and Rule of the personal Application of these merited Benefits, and that conformably to the scope of the Bible in its most explained Parts, as well as in full consistency with an apt Ministry, and a judicial Sentence against impenitent Infidels, to whom those Benefits are not applied, notwithstanding Gospel-offers. Whereas if we conceived never so fitly and with the greatest Soundness concerning the Satisfaction of Christ, and de-
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. nied a Gospel-Law, (or what's equivalent to it,) we apprehend no small Danger inevitably to ensue; and that in no less a matter than men's Salvation: For if this Gospel prove a Rule of Judgment, and that Christ gives forth Pardon and such merited Benefits thereby, will not our Ministry be useles and insnaring to Souls, which doth not explain and press the Gospel-Conditions in order to an Interest in those Benefits? And must not those secure Sinners be destroyed, who submit not to those Conditions, however confident they be upon Orthodox Apprehensions of what Christ hath done, to satisfy Justice, and merit eternal Life?

The Boundaries therefore I would propose to my self are, that Christ be not rivalled in his atoning or meriting Performances on the one hand, nor rejected in his enacted Rules of dispensing his purchased and offered Benefits on the other; for he is truly dishonoured, and Souls undone by both. But I would not be mistaken, as if this were suggested to reflect on the Brethren who are seriously intent upon the first; for it already appears, and will be more evident, that they neglect not the last, but affirm what to this purpose is equivalent to a Gospel-Law.

3. It is very evident, that when Protestants express great Zeal for Christ's alone Righteousness imputed to us in Justification, against against the Popish Doctrine, the generality of the Learned among them do only exclude every thing besides that Righteousness of Christ, from being meritorious of Acceptance, Pardon, Life, and any other Blessing; and from being any Satisfaction or Compensation for any Sin; affirming, that this alone can atone the Anger of God, for the sake of this alone will he absolve us, and nothing below this is perfect enough for us to stand in before the Bar of his Justice: And therefore the work of Faith itself can be no justifying Righteousness in that sense they took justifying Righteousness: (All which we heartily own:) And hence they oft appropriate the justifying Aptitude and Office of Faith, mostly to a Reliance on that sole meriting Righteousness of Christ, and its receiving Forgiveness, Acceptance, and a Right to Life, of mere Mercy, for the sake of Christ's alone Merits. All which is justly and truly spoken, as they accommodate it to the defence of Christ's Righteousness, as the only thing appointed or fit for the fore-described Purposes, and in opposition to the Popish Doctrine of Merit.

The Dispute they had with the Popish Church was about this meriting, atoning, satisfying Righteousness; and you'll find them often propose, that if the Papists would grant that this Righteousness was that of Christ alone, the great Controversy about
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. about Justification was at an end: But at the same time most Protestants, and our Homilies do fully grant, that Repentance was necessary, and required to Forgiveness, and Faith to Justification, and that these Blessings are promised to those Graces; tho' they were not led to dispute, Whether these were to be called a Righteousness, as qualifying the Subject on whom God's justifying Act terminated; but whether in that Act God regarded any thing as a meriting, absolving, satisfying Righteousness, any thing as a Satisfaction to Justice, any thing as an impelling Motive, or valuable Consideration, besides the Righteousness of Christ? To this their Debates were confined in their day, and this they were intent to maintain, as all Christians ought to be: Whereas the reason of debating the Name of that by which the Subject of Justification was determined, in opposition to such whom God did not justify, was not so much before them, as before others, of later years assaulted by such as went into another Extreme from the Doctrine of Popish Merit.

Nor was this matter otherwise stated by our able Divines, who contend against such Arminians as affirmed the credere to be our justifying Righteousness: For by Righteousness such Arminians mean, the Righteousness which is part of Payment, and stands in the place of, and answers the same same Ends in our Justification, as perfect Obedience served for to sinless Man; which we have before stated and renounced. Were there need, abundant Testimonies offer by which this Head is easily proved, tho' I grant some Men may be found to vent some inconsistent Expressions.

HAVING premised these things, I reassert the Difference that seems to continue about Justification, which lies,

[1.] In the manner of the Imputation of Christ's Righteousness. Both agree, it is imputed; but how, is not so universally assented to.

The one Side think the sense of imputing Christ's Righteousness to be, that God reckons us to have legally done and suffered what Christ did, and this to the full Satisfaction of Justice and the Law of works; and therefore, that we are reputed to have perfectly obeyed the Precepts of this Law, and fully endured its Curse; and for our legally doing so, God judgeth and pronounceth us righteous in full Conformity to the Law, and therefore entitled to Pardon, Adoption, and eternal Life. If you ask, Is this justifying Sentence the Sentence of the Law of works, viz. its premiant Sanction applied to us by God as the righteous Judge, judging us by the Law of works? They answer, It is the Sentence of the Law of works, but it is of Gospel-Grace that God allowed Christ to be one Person.
Chap. Person with us in the Covenant of works, VII. whereby we are thus accounted to obey and suffer in him.

But others think, that the Righteousness of Christ is imputed in the following manner, viz. (1.) They consider that the Father promised to Christ in Reward of his Obedience and Suffering, that they who believed on him should be pardoned, adopted, dealt with as righteous Persons who had not sinned, and be eternally saved: Hence the Lord Jesus has a Right to believers obtaining these things. And as Faith describes the Persons in this Covenant who shall obtain them, so when we become believers, we are accounted and adjudged to be such believers, and such as are to obtain those blessings in Christ's Right. (2.) They consider God in Christ, for sapiential Ends, making in the Gospel an offer of Pardon, Adoption, and eternal Life to poor Sinners if they believe, and promising these blessings when they believe; yet still as blessings bought by Christ's Obedience and Sufferings, and promised to him for believers; tho' withal used in his Gospel as motives, to enforce his Command of Faith and his Calls to it. These things thus considered, we apprehend, that when God in Christ justifieth us, he doth not only give us Pardon, Adoption, and Life; but he adjudgeth and sentenceth us to be the Persons who by the Covenant of Redemption were were to be pardoned, adopted, and saved in Ch. VII.

the Right of Christ; and to whom the Gospel by its Promise gives a personal Right to that Pardon, Adoption, and Life as purchased by Christ: And he esteems and adjudgeth, that the Obedience and Sufferings of Christ in their full virtue, is our pleadable Security for the enjoyment of them; whereby we have a Right to plead his death and merits with God, as what procured these for us, as well as God's Fidelity, who promised them to us in his Gospel.

You see by this account, that we rise not so high as to say, we are accounted to do and suffer what Christ did, and to be absolved immediately by the Sentence of the Law of works; nor do we fall so low, as to intend no more than a mere Participation of the Effects of Christ's Righteousness, but assert an Imputation of Christ's Righteousness it self relatively to those Effects. Christ's Right is applied, and his very Obedience reckoned to us, as what pleads with God for those Effects, and secures us against all condemning obstacles and Challenges. The justifying Sentence is not the Sentence of the Law; God saith not, "You have perfectly obeyed, therefore "you shall live; you have satisfied the "Curse, therefore you shall not die;" Yet the Righteousness which procured our Salvation, and is adjudged our pleadable Security
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. Security of enjoying this promised Salvation, includes an Obedience as perfect as that to which the Law promised Life if we had not sinned, and Sufferings equivalent to what the Curse pronounced against us when we sinned. But because we apprehend not where this Law includes such a Sentence as this, viz. "Because Christ " obeyed, you shall live tho' you obeyed " not; and because Christ who sinned not, " did suffer for your Sins, you shall be " absolved tho' you have sinned;" therefore we rather conceive the justifying Sentence to be the Sentence of the Gospel-Law, yet connoting the Law of mediation, and presupposing a Satisfaction made to the Law of works, which we conceive to be to this purpose: "Thou believing Sinner, I judicially esteem and pronounce thee to be one, that I promised to my Son in the Covenant of Redemption, to pardon, adopt, and glorify, in Reward of his perfect Obedience to my Law, and Satisfaction to my Justice, which I acknowledge he hath performed; as also to be one of those persons, to whom I made a Promise of Pardon, Adoption, and eternal Glory, when I offer'd these Blessings to all Sinners who would believe on him: Thou art therefore, in the virtue of the Promise made to Christ, and the Promise made to thee, adjudged to receive Forgiveness, Adoption, and Glory,
An End to Discord.

and to have a Right to plead the Righteousness of Christ for thy safe and comfortable Enjoyment of them in the prevailing efficacy of his Merits, who alone procured both these Blessings, and that Faith upon which thy Estate is so much altered.” Charity obligeth me to think, that some well-meaning Persons who talk of eternal justification in Christ, intend no more than this Promise made to Christ in the Covenant of Redemption: And by not distinguishing between this Promise, that all who should believe on him should be justified, and that other Article, that all the Elect shall believe on him, (which is a distinct thing,) they consider not, that by the first no man can be justified till he be a Believer; and the last Article only assures, that the Elect will be Believers, and by the Consequence of the first that they shall all be justified, but yet not before they are Believers. In what is promised to Christ, Isa. liii. 10, 11. He shall see his Seed, and by his Knowledge (or by Faith in him) be shall justify many, are not the same thing: The former ascertains, that the Elect shall believe; the latter, that they shall be justified when they believe: Nor could it be otherwise, even when Christ upon the Cross paid that, for the sake of which these Promises were made to him. He must then pursuant to the Compact die, that Believers might be justified, and the Elect become
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. VII. become Believers; otherwise the Articles of the Covenant of Redemption must be altered, and not direct his engaged Performances and Rewards. Nor can I chuse but wonder, to see our Divines in their Dispute against the Papists proving that Justification is a forensick or judicial Act; and yet, to find many using terms so improper to such an Act, and omitting, yea condemning, those which are proper.

But to digress no further: You see what is this part of the difference about Justification: Yet remember, our Brethren do not say, that we our selves did personally obey or suffer, or are reputed so to do, but that we are reputed to have done it in Christ, who was one legal Person with us in the account of the Law: Nor do they deny the Pardon of Sin, but own it, whatever others think of the difficulty of reconciling such things: They deny also, that we can be said to satisfy in Christ, tho' we died in him, or that we merited in him, tho' he merited. Further, there is no difference about the Effects of the imputed Righteousness of Christ, nor yet about the Righteousness itself as including both his active and passive Obedience, nor about the time of its Imputation, viz. when we believe.

And shall we condemn each other, notwithstanding this Agreement in almost every thing besides the manner of Imputation,
An End to Discord.

Notion, and this with relation to what God Chap. accounts us to have done in Christ, and not as to what Christ hath done for us?

Shall men rend each other, because one thinks, there can be no Imputation beyond what he grants; the other suspects, it is not an Imputation unless it be in his words; and yet both grant an Imputation effectively available to all the same real Purposes, viz. the honour of Christ and Grace, the accomplishment of God's Decree, and the acceptance and salvation of Believers as if they had never been unrighteous, with ground of believing hopes about it equally strong and quieting?

[2.] The other Point undecided is, what Title or Name we should give to that Faith, which is required in the Person on whom God's justifying Act doth terminate.

Our Brethren scruple our calling it a Qualification, a Condition, or a Righteousness. But others of us think, that each of these may properly be ascribed to it.—It may be called a Qualification, as it distinguisheth one man described by the Word, which declares who shall be justified, from another who, according to the Rule of the Word, and the Incongruity of the thing, is not to be justified, unless the divine Perfections and the methods of Grace should be reflected on; for by the Gospel-Rule, he that hath not Faith is to abide un-
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. der wrath. And how unbecoming and of ill Consequence would it be, to entitle a man to Glory, and receive him to favour for Christ's sake, while he rejecteth Christ, and is resolved to tread under foot his Blood; tho' it is from God's Promise, and not from any Merit of Congruity, that the Accepter of Christ should be justified?—They call it also a Condition, not to signify any Merit or Compensation, which they abhor; but to connote God's Offers of these Blessings to more than do accept of them, as also a Divine Authority enjoining a Compliance with the terms on which the Blessings are offered, tho' that be no more than a meet Acceptance.—And to shew the manner of God's conferring them upon that Acceptation, they think it may be called a Gospel-Righteousness; not as meritorious of the Blessing, no, nor a full Conformity to the Gospel-precept; but as it is the performed Condition of the offered Benefit, according to the tenor of the Gospel-promise, which always supposes Christ's Satisfaction, and his paying the impetrating Price of all such offered Blessings. And they are more induced to account the performed Condition a Gospel-Righteousness, because the Gospel so very often speaks of a subjective Righteousness in us, and denominates imperfect men righteous so expressly with respect to that Righteousness: They also think, that this cannot be from Obedience to to the Law of works unless it were perfect, which it is not; nor yet from full Obedience to the Precepts of the Gospel, which enjoin no less as a Duty than doth the Law itself: Therefore they can find no ground of that Denomination, besides a conformity to what the Gospel-promise appointeth as a Condition of the Good it entitles a person to; yet still as a means of giving us in a way of governing Grace, what was promised to Christ for us, as a Reward of his full Satisfaction to Legal Justice.

But our Brethren think these Terms too high, and prefer calling Faith an Instrument, as many Protestants do, who also call it a Condition: Some chuse to call it a Means, I suppose to note a physical Influence, in opposition to what's moral and expressive of any Law: Both which, by the way, we apprehend an ascribing much more to Faith, than we dare; because it makes Faith efficacious, from its natural aptitude and activity, without a divine Ordination of it to that end by any Promise.

The Reason of any Debate concerning these Expressions, lies in this: Our Brethren consider all the Gospel-Duties and Benefits as a mere physical Order of Blessings decreed by God to the Elect; and so one is given before the other, according as the Gospel describeth that Order. We grant the said Order, and should insist on no

Motives to induce men to submit to those Duties; and this, by Promises of the Benefits if the required Duties be performed, and threatenings of withholding the Benefits with additional Misery to be inflicted if they be not performed, with an account of judicial proceedings towards men with respect to their performance or non-performance of the said official Terms: But things being thus, and so very apparently the Indications of governing methods; and the aptitude of our Ministry for Conversion and Perseverance so much depending upon the affecting of men's hopes and fears; we are forced to own, that the Gospel is not only a description of the foresaid Order, but that it is a Law of Grace subordinate to the Covenant of Redemption.

Yet that none may suspect the difference above what it is, I shall recite what our Brethren grant in their Declaration.
They say, pag. 13. "We are made true

"48.) God doth judge and pronounce his "Elect ungodly and unjustified, till they "believe." All these are the words of Dr. Goodwin, which they approve of: And note, that in vol. ii. of the Creatures, lib. 2. cap. 7. pag. 51, to 63. he proves at large, that Faith in Christ is of another kind than the Faith required by the Law of works. They also say, pag. 46. "God in the "Covenant of Grace freely offereth unto Sin- "ners Life and Salvation by Jesus Christ, "requiring of them Faith in him, that "they may be saved." Note, the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, in their larger Catech. Qu. 32. express it, "re- "quiring Faith as the Condition to interest "them in Christ." And in their shorter Catech. Qu. 85. we are told, "To escape "the Wrath and Curse of God due to us "for Sin, God requireth Faith in Jesus "Christ, Repentance unto Life, &c." And in the Savoy Confession, as well as theirs, Chap. xviii. §. 2. "The true Believer's Cer- "tainty of Salvation is not a bare con- "jectural and probable Persuasion, ground- "ed upon a fallible hope; but an infalli- "ble Assurance of Faith, founded upon "the Divine Truth of the Promises of "Salvation, the inward Evidence of those "Graces unto which these Promises are "made,
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. "made, &c." Of all which our Brethren have approved. To add no more, they declare pag. 47. It's an Error, "that continued Repentance and Holiness are not in the nature of the thing, nor by the Constitution of the Gospel, necessary to our being possesed of eternal Life:"

And may it not be supposed, that nor is put for and? and that by what is called necessary by the Constitution of the Gospel, as distinguished from necessary in the nature of the thing, some of them may mean an authoritative or rectoral Constitution? that is, this Order is appointed by Christ as our Ruler, wherein he hath enacted this Connection, and requireth our Compliance.

These things being put together, must acquit our Brethren from the imputation of rendering Faith, Repentance, or Holiness, needless or useless to Salvation, tho' they scruple to call it a Gospel-Righteousness: And we hope it may incline them to a Forbearance towards us, who think these Concessions contain for substance all that we intend by the terms, Condition, and Gospel-Righteousness; which we make use of, as what do more exactly, comprehensively, and to some purposes more safely, express what we conceive to be the true import of these Passages when connected, and of which therefore we approve.

Yet to put things in a fuller Light, I shall represent the matter as it stands by
An End to Discord.

The brethren affirm, that God in his Covenant offering Life and Salvation to Sinners, and requiring Faith in him that they may be saved, this Faith in a Mediator is commanded by the Gospel, (and not by the Law of works, as Dr. Goodwin faith,) with Gospel-Promises of an Interest in Christ and his Benefits; and these are made to this Faith, (as a Condition, say the Assembly of Divines;) and this, in such a manner, that the Believer may have an infallible Assurance of the Benefits upon an inward evidence of his having this Faith, as that Grace to which the Promise was made, wherein the said Benefits were included: And also, that this Gospel includes that Word, which is the Rule of Judgment, by which Rule God judgeth that man (tho' Elect,) who hath not this Faith, to be a Christless, unpardoned Child of wrath; and him who hath this Faith, to be a true Owner of Christ and Pardon: Also, that Repentance is of such necessity to all Sinners, that this, as well as Faith, is required that they may escape, and none may expect to be pardoned in a state of unbelief and impenitence; yea, continued Repentance and Holiness are necessary to our possession of eternal Life: And all this is declared to be necessary, not only from the nature
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. VII. nature of the thing, but also by the Constitution of the Gospel.

This Account, I apprehend, is so equivalent to a Gospel-Law of Grace for all its great purposes, that I shall not be offended at what name they please to give it: And did not a Fear of offending them prevent me, I would prove it to be all the Law of Grace which we assert; especially if they would allow, that when they say God requireth Faith, that Sinners under Offers of Life may be saved, it's upon his Throne (tho' a Throne of Grace,) that God in Christ requireth it, and from thence directs his Offers of Salvation to Sinners; and thence sentenceth them who live under Gospel-Offers, by their asserted Rule of Judgment.

However, we have no reason to contend; especially when both agree, that the Debate is about the Instrument of Donation, and the Qualification of the Subject to receive a Gift; and not about any thing that meriteth the Gift, freely bestowed on God's part, and thankfully and humbly received on our part. A low degree of Charity would make allowance on both hands, when the Difference is so minute. They seem jealous of the honour of Free-Grace, (yet owning Christ's Merits:) We are for Free-Grace, in opposition to all Merits besides Christ's, but not exclusively of all governing Methods in applying the effects of Free-

Free-Grace. They grant, that Faith in Christ is required, that we may be saved: We more expressly say, it's by a pastoral Authority. They grant, it is so by the Law of works: We say, it's by a positive Gospel-Law, tho' we grant when this positive Law requireth it, we are obliged also by the general Law of Nature to yield Obedience; yet not by the Law of works, as specified by Adam's Covenant, which Faith in Christ was inconsistent with from the essential nature of that Covenant. Our Brethren are watchful against any inherent Righteousness of man mingling with Christ's Righteousness: We, besides avoiding of that, are solicitous lest men come short of Salvation by the Righteousness of Christ, through a neglect of what be requireth in all those who shall be saved by it; and yet we declare against all things besides Christ's Righteousness, to be any imperating, satisfying, atoning, meriting or compensating Righteousness; and as Faith hath no share or place in this Office, so Christ's Righteousness, tho' the sole meritorious Cause, is not that which God by the Gospel requires of Sinners that they may be saved by the Righteousness of Christ; Faith is that commanded Requisite, and no more than that; its place is thereto confined; and therefore here is no mingling of our Righteousness with Christ's, because their use, place, and offices be so very distinct.

Chap. They seem most afraid of Popery and Arminianism; and therefore keep to this sense of being justified by Faith alone, viz. we are justified only by Christ believed on, or the Object of Faith only is imputed to us for Righteousness. We are truly afraid of Popery and Arminianism, but not only of these, but of Antinomianism too; and therefore are intent to maintain two great Truths included in that one Sentence, We are justified by Faith; viz.

(i.) That the Believer is absolved from Guilt, accepted into God's Favour, and entitled to eternal Life, in and for Christ's Righteousness; and neither Faith, nor any Grace or Act of ours, makes the least Recompence to God, or is the least Price or Merit of Pardon or Life, or any Motive inclining divine Justice to promise or accept us into his favour, or to treat us as righteous Persons. This from our heart we own; and know, that this is what found Protestants intended by it against the Papists. Yet as God promised to Christ in the Covenant of Redemption, that all Believers should be absolv'd, &c. so in the Gospel-Offer of his Grace to Sinners, he promised to Men, that he would in and for the Righteousness of Christ, absolve, accept, treat as righteous Persons, and give eternal Life (already purchased by Christ,) to every true Believer; commanding Sinners to believe, and threatening that if they believed not, not, they should remain condemned, yea CHAP. become subject to forer punishments ; and VII. that he would judge them by this Gospel-Rule of Judgment. Whence we are atttentive to a second Truth, viz.

(2.) THAT God accepteth and ac-counteth Faith to be a performed Condition of this Gospel-Covenant, and upon it acquits the Sinner from the Charge of damning Infidelity; and adjudgeth the Believer, qua such, in opposition to Infidels, to be, in Christ's Right, and by his Gospel-Promise, entitled to a present personal Interest in the foresaid Absolution, Acceptance, and Gift of eternal Life; yet as procured by Christ's Righteousness alone, and applied for his sake.

To add no more, our Brethren in the Doctrine of Justification almost confine their Regards to the Satisfaction of Christ, wherein Christ transacted with the provoked Justice of God: We, besides that, consider a propitiated God in Christ applying the effects of his Redemption to men in a Method of governing Grace; but without any real difference in the Doctrine of Satisfaction; and withal sincerely granting the Condition is performed in the Strength of Christ freely dispensed. Yet upon the whole, they provide against carnal Security, and we against carnal Boasting: And as they are far from designing to eclipse the Glory of Christ, as King, Chap. Lawgiver. and Judge; so we are as far from intending the diminution of his Glory, as a Priest. How unreasonable and unhappy therefore would perpetuated Contests be, where the Grounds pretended are of so little weight?

Thus I have insisted on what seems most like a Difference, in the Doctrine of Satisfaction and Justification. Some weak persons may think there is a great Controversy, where I see nothing worth our notice. They will say, Some think, that we are justified by one Act of Faith, viz. Reliance. Well, but they say, justifying Faith is receiving Christ, &c. as well as a Reliance. Ay, but a man sees only with his Eye, tho' more is of the Essence of a man: But I say, no man sees without that which is of the Essence of his Eye.—Again, some think, that justifying Faith as such receives Christ only as a Priest; while others say, it receives him also as a King and Prophet: Yet the last say, the convinced Sinner hath a special respect to Christ's Priesthood, as most agreeable to his present case; and the former will say, it's but an hypocritical Faith, that receives not Christ as Prophet and King as well as Priest: Nay, it's not the true Christ, the anointed Messias, who is received, unless it be as Prophet, King, and Priest, even Christ Jesus the Lord.—Ay, but some say, say, Repentance is an effect of Justification: But there be very few of our Congregational Brethren of that mind; and I suppose, they mean Works meet for Repentance, and not a Change of the purpose of the heart.

NAY, but several say, Faith alone is the Instrument of Justification; while others make Repentance the Condition of Forgiveness. What then? seeing the first grant, there is no justifying Faith without Repentance; and the last grant, the aptitude of Faith to receive and acknowledge Christ (which I suppose they mean by Instrument,) is far greater than Repentance. But when both Sides consider Faith as an ordained Condition as well as an Instrument, they'll scarce dispute, but that Repentance is a Condition of Pardon as well as Faith; unless they would agree to join them together, by calling Faith a penitent Faith, or Repentance a believing Repentance; connoting at once a Sinner's purpose to return to God by Christ the Mediator, and his closing with Christ the Mediator, that he may return to God by him: Tho' I think the end is first agreed to, before the way or means to that end is resolved on or made use of.

Obj. But sure there is a vast difference, between those who think we are justified by Faith only, and those who think we are justified by Works as well as by Faith,
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. Anfw. i. Not so very great; when both mean, that we are justified neither by Faith nor Works, as the word justified is commonly taken: For both agree, that we are absolved, accepted as righteous, and entitled to eternal Life, only for Christ's death and obedience, as the only meriting, satisfactory, and atoning Righteousness.

2. They who say, it's by Faith alone that we apply this Righteousness, do also grant, that Faith is not alone in the person to whom God applies the Righteousness of Christ; and when they apply it to themselves, Repentance, Love, &c. are concomitants with Faith. And they who think, we are justified by Works, as they think it is God's applying Christ's Righteousness to us, and not our applying it to ourselves, that is the great justifying Act; so they grant, that God justifieth us as soon as we repent and believe with the heart, and doth not suspend a justified State, till Works meet for Repentance or the Effects of Faith are produced; yea, should a man die then, he would be certainly saved.

3. They who say, it's by Faith alone, acknowledge, that justifying Faith will certainly produce good Works; and if good Works and persevering Holiness do not follow, it was a dead Faith; and because dead, it never was a justifying Faith, however men flatter'd themselves: Also, that men's Faith, tho' not their Persons, is justified by their Works: Yea, the most Judicious own, that if Sin should reign in Believers, and they apostatize, they would be condemned; (tho' the Promise of Perseverance make that impossible;) and therefore persevering Holiness and good Works so far con-continue their Justification, as they prevent what would bring them into Condemnation; and Faith is the Condition of the continuation of Justification. See Dr. Owen of Justification, pag. 207, 208, 306. On the other hand, they who say, we are justified by Works, do account Works to be no more but the executing the federal consenting Act of Faith; and so it's Faith exerting it self by various occasions: And condering, that the Believer's not only forgiving his Enemies, but his persevering in Faith and Holiness, are plain Conditions in many Promises made thereto; and God pronounceth to Believers, that he will have no pleasure in any Man who draweth back, and he shall die if Sin reigneth in him;

(Heb. x. 38. Rom. viii. 13. Mat. vi. 14,

15.) they conceive, that by Perseverance in Faith and true Holiness, they are kept from being chargeable with final and total

Apostacy, and from obnoxiousness to the Evils denounced by the Gospel against Apostates as such, and are adjudged to be under the Influence and Safeguard of the Promises made to Believers as persevering.

Nevertheless they abhor a thought, that
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. Perseverance in Faith and Holiness, or any good Work, is any meriting Righteousness, or the least Compensation for Sin, or entitling Price of the least Benefit: Nor do they exclude the need of multiplied and continued Pardon, or make any Blessing due of Debt; but they rely wholly on Christ's Merits for these things, as the only procuring Cause; tho' they are affected and governed by these places of God's Word, which are directed to Believers as part of his Rule of Judgment; well knowing, that whatever Sentence is passed by the said Word in this Life, God executes it now in part, and more at Death; but at the great Day it will be solemnly pronounced, and perfectly executed.

These respective Concessions duly weighed, secure those who say we are justified by Faith alone from the danger of Licentiousness; and those who say we are justified by Works also, from detracting from the honour of Christ's Righteousness, as having the sole meriting, atoning Virtue and Efficacy in Justification; and do not only grant Perseverance, but think these conditional Promises and Comminations are apt and designed means of it, in Subjects capable of moral Government, and whose Warfare is unaccomplished.

However such different Sentiments may appear to others, I lay so little stress upon them, that I had not thought it worth my my labour to have printed a Sheet against any man, who confessed the necessity of saving Faith (as described in the Gospel) to Justification, (Repentance and Love still accompanying that Faith, in the Object on whom God's justifying Act doth terminate,) and the uneffectualness of Faith to save any who neglected to perform good Works, and to persevere in Faith and Holiness. Such as granted but these things, I had never wrote against for scrupling the conditional respect of them to the Gospel-Law. But Dr. Crisp's Notions I apprehended dangerous; and they so greatly prevailing, my Brethren thought my confuting them necessary at that time; whereas I had no purpose, when I wrote against Dr. Crisp, to intermeddle with these other points: But some Congregational Brethren in their Attempts against my Book, did from a very few occasional Expressions therein, accuse us of Socinianism, Arminianism, and Popery; and that they might have some pretence to fix that Charge, they turned the Controversy into these lesser Matters, whereby I was necessitated either to insist on them, (however against my Will,) or else to abide under the foresaid severe Imputation, to the prejudice not only of my own Ministry, but also of most of my Brethren.
C H A P. VIII.

An Attempt to accommodate the Difference, between such as say Christ’s Righteousness is imputed only as to Effects, and not in se; and those of us who think it is imputed in se.

Chap. VIII. FORESEEING an Objection, that will be improved against a peaceable Forbearance towards a number, however small, and that Rigidness may include in that number whomever the Objectors shall disaffect, it’s of use to state it.

Object. GRANTING the forementioned Points to be reduced below a Cause of Dissent, yet the Difference cannot be compromised, between such as say the Righteousness of Christ is imputed [in se] for Justification, and them who say it is not imputed [in se] but only quoad effectus.

Answ. I THINK it may be accommodate; at least so far, as to cut off just Pretences for hereticating and dividing from each other: To which end I will consider these several Opinions, and then reduce the difference.

First,
An End to Discord.

First, Among them who say, Christ's Righteousness is imputed [in se,] there be two Opinions most noted, and whereunto all others are reducible: Of both these I have already treated so much, that little more is needful.

[1.] There are some who think, that the Elect are judicially, according to the Law of works, accounted to have done and suffered in Christ all that the Law demanded, both as the Punishment of Sin, and the Merit of eternal Life. Such must hold, that Christ's death and obedience are the formal Righteousness of the Elect, and the formal Cause of Justification, and that from the first moment of their personal Subsistence; yea, and (except making Christ to be their Representative,) without any Gift of that Righteousness, it being imputed not of Grace, but of legal Justice, as Adam's Obedience had been if he had finally obeyed, and his Offence now is upon his sinning.

There are others, who are for this judicial reckoning Sinners to obey and suffer in Christ; but they hold, they are not adjudged to have done this, till they are Believers; and then, they are legally just before God, and as such entitled to eternal Life. These speak more safely, but less consistently; they limit the Time, from a conviction that the whole scope of the Gospel must be contradicted, if Unbelievers lievers do not remain condemned, and Believers only are justified. But yet it seems hard, to apprehend, that God by the Law of Works accounts the Person of a Believer to have suffered in Christ, and therefore to be absolved; whom yet he did not account to suffer in Christ while he was an Unbe-liever, and therefore condemned him, and this by that very same Law which now acquits him. I know, to make this consist, it's offered, that the Elecť are not Christ's Seed till they become Believers.
But this comes short; for it will thence follow, that Christ in his death was a strict Representative, who personated Believers.
[qua] Believers, which will induce ill Con-féquences: And yet further, it is not true, that the Persons of Believers were fémenally in Christ, when he died, as we were in Adam when he sinned; and so no Argument can be brought from that Instance.
I grant, that both the Merit, and the powerful Virtue whereby our Persons in time obtain Faith, were in Christ before we were born; but that makes not Christ the Root of our Persons at that time, but of that regenerating Virtue whereby we become Believers: And therefore, tho' as to this change of our Qualification we may be called Christ's Seed when we believe, yet it's not such a Seed, as that it may be said of us, we suffered in him, as we sinned in Adam, who was the natural Root of our Persons, and thereupon such a Representative as his Descendants sinned in. What may be said of Christ's adopting Merit, will have no place here; for these Authors make Adoption to be an Effect of Justification, and so the Imputation is prior.

[2.] There be others, who are for imputed Righteousness [in se,] but cannot approve of the former manner of Imputation; among whom there is some variety in wording their Conceptions, but they come to one and the same thing, viz. That God adjudgeth the Believer to be one, whose Absolution, Adoption, and Glory were promised to Christ in Reward of his death and obedience by the Covenant of Redemption; (which are promised also to the Believer himself in the Gospel-Covenant;) and for his actual interest and enjoyment thereof, as also his acceptance and treatment as a righteous Person against all Challenges, God judicially accounts what Christ hath done and suffered to be his pleadable Security: This we take to be Imputation.

Secondly, As to the Opinion of those who say, Christ's Righteousness is not imputed [in se,] but only as to Effects; they in expressions oppose all the forementioned Account, denying that the first Head is true, and that the second is any Imputation.
Peace with Truth; or

Chapter of Christ's Righteousness in, &c.

VIII. Vertheless they grant, that Christ's Righteousness is the meritorious Cause of our Justification by Faith, and seem to insist mostly upon its Efficacy to that end; as Christ's Satisfaction was the ground upon which God enacted the Gospel-Covenant, wherein our Faith, tho' imperfect, is accounted for Righteousness. Concerning this Opinion I shall offer a few things.

[1.] None ought to narrow it, as if the Authors meant, that Pardon and eternal Life are not merited by the Righteousness of Christ; for they affirm, that these and other Gospel-Blessings are merited by Christ, as well as the Gospel-Covenant. Pray say not this; for it's not only the Covenant itself, but those very Blessings which that Covenant conveys, that are the merited Effects of Christ's death and obedience; they were his deserved Rewards, which are dispensed to us upon believing. This I insist, to obviate a Conceit too much improved by some, (so stupid, or worse, that they will not own this Distinction,) who still cry out against those of this Opinion, as if they confined the Influence of Christ's Righteousness to the procuring of a Law whereby men were to purchase Pardon and Life by their own Faith: Whereas they are so far from this, that they affirm these Blessings were already accounted purchased, and Authority in in Christ to dispense them, before he could CHAP. enact such a Law.

[2.] They intend not to exclude Christ's Righteousness from being imputed in any sense; for they say it's imputed quoad effectus, and therefore should not be charged to deny all Imputation, or represented to say, we are pardoned and saved for our own Works, without any Imputation of Christ's Death and obedience at all.

[3.] In all which they affirm concerning justification, they still suppose Christ's compleat Satisfaction, and are found therein: None can accuse them to differ from the Orthodox, as to Christ's expiating Sacrifice, or Impetration of eternal Life.

[4.] I could wish a very worthy Person of this Opinion would review his own account of justification; wherein he faith, "It is that Act, whereby God imputes to every sound Believer his Faith for Righteousness upon the account of Christ's Satisfaction and Merits, and gives Pardon and Life as the Benefits of it," that is, of justification; which he further explicates, "Through Christ's Sacrifice the defects of this Faith, which is our Righteousness, are pardoned, and by his Merits that imperfect Duty is accounted or imputed to us for Righteousness, which it is not in itself." Had I thus stated this Point, I should ask my self, Do not I set Pardon too remote from Christ's Sacrifice

Chap. viii. can Pardon be the Effect of imputing Faith for Righteousness, (which is justification,) and yet God cannot impute Faith for Righteousness unless he first pardon its defects for the sake of Christ's Sacrifice? But the cause of my mentioning this Account follows.

[5.] They do affirm what amounts to a real Imputation of Christ's Righteousness in se ; at least what supposeth this Imputation, and infers it to be necessary. For how by Christ's Merits can a Righteousness in it self imperfect be reckoned before a just God for our perfect Righteousness, and yet those Merits, for which it is so reckoned, not be imputed at all for Righteousness to us who have that Faith? Would Faith be no Righteousness, except the Divine Mind did apply the Merits of Christ to Faith to make it a Righteousness, upon which I am accounted righteous by this Faith; and yet the Divine Mind not apply to me that Righteousness of Christ, without which my Faith left me still unrighteous? whereas it seems undeniable, as far as Christ's Righteousness is necessary to make my personal Faith my Righteousness in God's account, that same very Righteousness is necessary to make my Person righteous in God's account.—Moreover, they own, that God promised to Christ in reward of his meritting Sufferings and Obedience, that that all Believers should be absolved and glorified: And can they be adjudged to this Absolution and Glory, without a judicial acknowledgment that they are to be absolved and glorified in that Right of Christ which resulted from that Promise made to him? And can that be, without an Imputation of those Sufferings and Obedience of Christ, which are rewarded in that Right of Christ, and thereby in those Blessings wherein Believers have this judicially acknowledged Interest?—They also abhor a thought, that our Faith can be presented to God as any Righteousness in Satisfaction to Justice, Atonement for our Sin, or the meriting Price of our Salvation: And withal they grant, there must be such a Righteousness; and that this was Christ's Righteousness, by which our Sins are satisfied for, we receive the Atonement, are reconciled, and obtain the Salvation so purchased. Now is it possible, that things should stand thus, and Christ's Righteousness not be imputed to us? Can our righteous Judge declare himself satisfied, atoned, and reconciled to us Sinners for the Righteousness of Christ, and not impute to us that Righteousness in itself, as what he accounts a Plea for us in his account? Can we enjoy the merited Effects of Christ's Death, and that Death not be reckoned what secures to us those Effects, against the Challenges which the Merits of it were designed to answer?—Finally, Do not these Divines oft rest on and plead with God the Merits of Christ, more immediately and directly than a denial of Imputation will admit? when they rest on Christ's Righteousness, and plead it with God for Pardon; (tho' it's true we could not expect Pardon for it, were not Pardon promised for the sake thereof.) I think their Minds oft act more directly and fully towards the Righteousness of Christ, than to intend it thus, viz. "I trust in Christ's "Merits for Pardon, as that Pardon is "the effect of that Justification wherein "our Faith is accounted through Christ's "Satisfaction a Righteousness according to "the Gospel-Covenant; which Covenant was "procured by the Merits of Christ's Death."

I grant, there may be use of this progressive manner of arriving at Christ's Death for support of our Faith, as we confine its regards to the Gospel-Covenant, and examine our Interest thereby as a Rule of Judgment. But I humbly think, that when we plead with God for Pardon for the sake of Christ's Merits, we have a more direct Eye to the Covenant of Redemption, wherein a Pardon was promised to Christ for Believers in reward of his Death; and which the Gospel distinctly expresseth in this, viz. That Pardon is granted for the sake of Christ's Death, as what procured it in se, as well as what merited the Gospel-Covenant, Covenant, which is the Instrument of the donation of it. And so by keeping our eye on the Covenant of Redemption, we plead Christ's Right as more immediately imputable; and by keeping our thoughts on the Gospel-Connection between Pardon and Christ's Death as the procuring Merit of it, we plead Christ's very Performances mediately imputed, viz. as our pleadable Security for our certain obtaining and safe enjoying the said Forgiveness.

[6.] The Reasons why these venerable Persons are so intent to deny an Imputation of Christ's Righteousness in se, are, (1.) An apprehension that there's no such Imputation, unless we are accounted by God to have done and suffered what Christ did; which would unavoidably introduce the Antinomian Scheme, as most consistent. But this I deny to be the only import of that Phrase; for when that Righteousness it self is imputed relatively to the special Effects of it, it's truly an Imputation of it in se. And whereas they of the other Extreme say, that its being a pleadable Security for our Pardon, is but an Effect; I answer, This Righteousness it self being that Security, is indeed an Effect of the Compact between the Father and the Son; yet it is not this Effect is imputed, but the Righteousness it self, as such: And by the same Rule, as they can deny it to be imputed in se, because it's

Peace with Truth; or

Chap. imputed as a pleadable Security, they may VIII. better say, Its being imputed for Justification, and for Atonement, &c. would make it to be no Imputation of it in se; for those are but Effects, and that by virtue of the same Compact. (2.) A Zeal for the Gospel-Righteousness of Faith: But that is very consistent with the imputed Righteousness of Christ; and tho' both meet in our Justification, yet it's under very distinct Considerations, of which afterwards.

Nor can I forbear again to inform the world, that both Extremes arise from too much disregard of the one or the other Covenants, wherein the Salvation of a Sinner is adjusted. These Brethren, forgetting the Covenant of Redemption to which the Gospel-Covenant is subordinate, too little mention the Righteousness of Christ: The other Brethren overlook the Gospel-Covenant, and darken a Gospel-Righteousness of Faith: Whereas a distinct respect to the Rule of Satisfaction and Impetration on the one hand, and to the Rule of the Application of impetrated Benefits on the other hand, would put a period to their principal Disputes.

From this Representation of the several Sentiments of the Brethren concerned in the Point before us, a mutual Forbearance seems no unjustifiable thing between them who differ most; and no considerable Disagreement
An End to Discord.

Disagreement remains between the others. Chap. VIII.

(1.) They who think the Imputation of Christ's Righteousness in se, is God's reckoning we did and suffered what Christ did, claim a tender regard from them who say it's imputed only as to Effects; for they disown the Antinomian Consequences of it, and abhor all Abuses of it to carnal Boasts and profane Libertinism, of which before. How unreasonable then were it to perpetuate Contests about this Point from the ill Consequences of it, when those Consequences are denied?—On the other hand, it appears too like uncharitable Rigidity for them to condemn as intolerable, such who say Christ's Righteousness is imputed only as to Effects: For whatever is the sound of their words, they ascribe nothing to Faith or Works which belongs to Christ's Righteousness; nor do they detract from the honour of Christ's Righteousness any thing which these Brethren ascribe thereto, and are Orthodox in the Doctrine of Satisfaction against Socinianism and Popery. When they say, Faith is an accepted Righteousness, do they mean, it's a Satisfaction, either to atone for Sin, or merit Life? No, they abhor it, and confine both to Christ's Righteousness entirely. But they do not say, Christ's Righteousness is imputed: That's not true; for they expressly say, it is imputed. Ay, but not
Peace with Truth: or

Chap. in fe: But should that be so, would it not be far from a Christian Spirit, to be implacable for not using a Phrase which the Spirit of God makes no use of, who surely knew how to express Truth as properly as fallible Men should pretend to? Yea, but the Scriptures speak what amounts to this Phrase: And so do they, in granting Christ’s Righteousness to be the only Atonement, and meriting Cause of Pardon and Life, and of Acceptance with God as righteous Persons. But do not they think, we stand before God only in this Righteousness of Faith, and not of Christ? No; they assure us, that what Righteousness Faith is, it’s so by Christ’s Sacrifice and Merits; and it’s only a Righteousness, as a performed Condition of the Gospel, describing the Persons who obtain that Salvation, which is the Effect of the Righteousness of Christ; and whose Satisfaction still interposeth between the Justice of God and a believing Sinner: Neither are they backward to ascribe to efficacious Grace that Virtue, whereby we are inclined and enabled to believe. Men may expose each other by fery Debates after such Concessions; but he who expresseth most Heat, discovers the more ungospel Spirit, if not the weaker Cause, and weaker Judgment.

(2.) As for such who own Christ’s Righteousness in fe to be imputed in the second second sense, and those who say it's not imputed in it self, but as to Effects; if they contend, the first must quarrel with the other, for denying in words what they grant for substance; and the latter must be warm against the former, because they will not join with them in offending the weak, and hazarding Truth, by rejecting a Phrase, which, well explained, doth properly express what both intend.

CHAP. IX.

An Abstract of what helped me to avoid some Perplexity concerning Justification, with some account of our being justified at the Creator and Redeemer's Bar.

THO' I avoid arguing any Controversy in these Sheets, which are designed for Peace; yet I think it may promote this healing Design, to give a short Abstract of some thoughts whereby I arrived to Satisfaction in the Doctrine of Justification.

§. 1. Justification being a forensick Act, our thoughts ought not to wander beyond
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. beyond what is necessary to it as a judicial Sentence, nor disregard whatever belongs to that. Here the principal Considerations are, the Judge, the Rule of Judgment, the Cause and Person to be tried by that Rule, and the Sentence to be pass'd by the Judge on the Person whose Cause is so tried; which must be no other, than what that Rule of Judgment, duly applied, containeth. Hereby what some call Constitutive Justification, is strictly no other, than the Conformity of the Person to the Rule of Judgment, by which he is acquittable or rewardable, or both. Passive Justification is no other, than the Effect of the judicial Sentence; or the Person's State considered as absolved, or to be rewarded, or both, by the Sentence now judicially pass'd upon him; and supposeth a Sentence, and is measured by it:

§. 2. A justifying Sentence is pass'd upon every justified Person, and continues to pass upon him by the Gospel-Promises, applied by an omnipresent, all-seeing, infallible, faithful, almighty God. Rom. v. 1, 2. The Gospel-offer is the Rule of Judgment; the Gospel in its respective Promises complied with, is God's justifying Sentence, and that, conclusive and effectual, tho' not so discernible by us, as if it were solemnly pronounced. Here therefore,
An End to Discord.

(1.) The transcendent Perfections of God must raise our minds above human Judicatories. He needs no Evidence, because he knoweth all things; there needs no Summons to appear, for he is ever with us; he cannot err in Judgment, for he is inflexibly righteous, and knows the Rule of Judgment in its extent and allowances.

(2.) We know not what Solemnity this Sentence may be pronounced with concerning us, tho' out of our hearing. We know not what Solemnity may be used in Heaven, where there is Joy for the Conversion of Sinners; or what at the Throne, where Christ is our interceding Advocate, &c. Tho' sometimes God condescends to make it audible to our own Consciences by the received Testimony of his Spirit.

(3.) This Sentence is in part executed upon every Believer as to what is promised for the present, as well as his Title is adjudged to what is reserved for the future. The in-dwelling Spirit, Assistances peculiar to Christ's Members, Answers of Prayer, the Comforts of the Holy Ghost, and whatever special Actings of Providence belong only to God's adopted ones, are the Execution of the justifying Sentence, and suppose such a Sentence pass'd, as well as that it is a gracious one.

(4.) God still pronounceth a justifying Sentence, according to the variety
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. of his Gospel-Promises, tho’ that great one which alters our State passeth upon our first believing. As he adjudgeth us to Pardon and Adoption, upon our first acceptance of his Grace; so he adjudgeth us non-forfeeters, upon our abiding in Christ, or persevering acceptance, according as the various Promises describe the Heirs thereof.

§. 3. The same justifying Sentence, that God pass’d by his Promises applied by himself in this Life, will be more solemnly and convincingly pronounced at the Judgment-Day, when the full and perfect Execution of the Sentence is to take place.

(r.) We shall be as truly judged at that day, as if we had not been sentenced, or the Sentence executed at all, in this Life, or at Death. The wise God, who knows the Subserviency hereof to Practical Religion, doth oft and most expressly deliver it, and in such words as if we were all to be among those that shall be found alive when the Trumpet sounds. For we must all appear before the Judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive, &c. (a). So then every one of us shall give an account of himself to God (b). And what must we give an account of? Our Words Words (c), the Secrets of our Hearts (d), the use of our Talents (e), our Works (f), &c. that is, every thing that gives Evidence concerning men's Condition, as it's determinable by the Rule of Judgment, which principally centers in this, Have they sincerely accepted of the Salvation offered by the Redeemer?

(2.) The Rule of Judgment and Sentence at that day will be the same, as that by which every Believer is justified on this side Death. It's no new or other Sentence, but the same more solemnly declared; unless you'll say, it includes the entire extent of the Rule for the time of trial, as well as that which changed our State.

(3.) The great design of that solemn Process and open Sentence, is to vindicate God in Christ as no Respecter of Persons (g), in the extremely different State of the Damned and the Saved, both in this Life and Eternity, especially such as lived under the offers of Salvation; and withal to vindicate his own mysterious Methods towards the Justified in their past Life, as also to vindicate them from unjust Affections (h). But to instance no more than the first; He'll convince Angels and

Chap. and Men by manifested Instances, that IX. they whom he justified, and now faveth, were Persons justifiable by that Rule of Judgment whereby the others are condemned; and that the Sentence he pronounceth and executes on each, is the very Sentence which that Rule impartially applied to their real Cases denounced.

§. 4. The Rule of Judgment in its nature and scope is to be principally regarded, in order to right Apprehensions concerning the justifying Sentence. This determineth what is a justifying Righteousness, and what is not: This declares the nature of the adjudged Title, whether it be of Grace or Debt, dependent or independent: And thereby is evident what we are adjudged to, and whether the Sentence passeth upon several complex Conditions, or one particular one: For we must be free from whatever the Rule of Judgment denounceth condemnable, and not be without what it confineth its promised Absolution or Benefits to; seeing the Lord our Judge doth sentence us, as this revealed Rule takes hold of us.

§. 5. I find nothing plainer, than on the one hand, that we are made righteous by Christ's Obedience (i), that we are accepted cepted in the Beloved (k), and washed from our Sins in his Blood (l); and that by him we receive the Atonement (m): And on the other hand, that Faith is imputed for Righteousness (n), and we are justified by Faith (o), and by our Words (p), and by our Works (q), and men are called righteous, with respect to their Graces and Actions short of Perfection; that Christ's judicial Proceedings are upon men's Temper and Behaviour (r), and Promises of Pardon and Life are made still to Repentance, Faith, and Perseverance; and that the Gospel denounces Death against the impenitent (s), the unbelieving (t), the disobedient (u), the barren (x), Apostates (y), and Workers of Iniquity (z). Nor can it be overlook'd, that Perfection is not intended in what the Gospel-Promise is made to, nor is the Gospel-threating of Damnation level'd against any Offences consistent with Sincerity. Hence I conclude, that when God justifies a Sinner, the Rule by which he judgeth requires a judicial regard to inherent Faith, &c.

Peace with Truth; or

Chap. same justifying Sentence, in all respects, could not be pronounced upon Christ's Righteousness, and upon that of a believing Sinner: Unless either,

1. That one Rule did originally promise Life to perfect legal Obedience, and also to that which was not a perfect Obedience to the Law. But if I suppose this, I must admit, that the Law did not denounce Death for the least Sin; for to condemn to Death for the least Sin, and to promise Life to imperfect Obedience, cannot be consistent. Yea, I must then consider God to enact that Rule of Judgment, as in his first relation to innocent Man, viz. as Creator; governing by virtue of his absolute Propriety in Man as his Creature: But if God be considered only in that relation, it was inconsistent with his Perfections to enact a Rule of Judgment which promised Life to any thing short of perfect Obedience to the Law he delivered, and which Man was originally capable to obey. And moreover, we find in the Rule of Judgment, by which he now justifies men, a direct respect to many things, which that first Law was inconsistent with; as the Death of a Redeemer for our Sin, Faith in this Redeemer, Pardon of Sin, and Absolution from the Curse which condemned us as Sinners, &c. Or unless,

2. That one Rule of Judgment were were the Gospel-Promise of the Redeemer, viz. He that believeth shall be saved. Hereby indeed the justifying Sentence would directly pass upon Man as a Believer, and judge him to a Right in whatever the Gospel promised to Believers, qua such. And considering the chief design of the Gospel is to induce fallen Sinners to believe, upon a supposition and assurance given, that Satisfaction is already made by our Redeemer, and not now to be made or adjusted; many are apt to confine their thoughts of Justification to this, as the alone Rule of Judgment, and the account of the final Judgment generally states it in this manner: Nor can I deny, but this is in some respects a safe as well as easy method.

But I cannot agree, that the justifying Sentence is by this Rule so abstractively taken: For, (1.) This would too much confine the Influence of Christ's Merits to the mere procuring of the Gospel-Promise; whereas we find it more immediately and fully connected with Pardon, and all other saving Benefits. (2.) We must be made righteous by Christ's Obedience, in some way less remote than this. (3.) The Satisfaction of Christ is not hereby sufficiently acknowledged nor applied in our Justification. Many other Reasons might be given, why I am convinced, that when God justifies a believing Sinner, the Sentence

Chapter IX.

Tence respects him under some further judicial Consideration than merely a Believer; and consequently, the Rule of Judgment extensively taken, required somewhat more to constitute him a justifiable Person.

§ 7. I take the Rule of Judgment therefore to be the Gospel-Law, in a subordinate connection with the Law of Mediation, wherein the Honour of our Creator governing us by the Law of works is provided for, and the Ends of that Law fulfilled: And so the Sentence will respect the imputed Righteousness of Christ, and the Righteousness of Faith too; the first, as satisfactory and meritorious with our creating Lawgiver; the latter, as the performed Condition of the Redeemer's Grant of the blessed Effects of Christ's Satisfaction and Merits; and whereby this man who believes, is discriminated from such who rejected the Offer of Salvation. In the first, Justice is satisfied that a Rebel should be absolved and glorified; in the last, the Rule enacted by governing Grace is answered by the Believer; so that the Judge is no more a Respeoter of Persons in applying these Benefits as a Redeemer, than he was regardless of governing Justice in the Condition upon which they were procured by our Saviour.

§. 8. The Rule of Judgment then must be this: That the Believer (tho' a Sinner,) whose Absolution, Pardon, Acceptance as righteous, and Salvation, were promised to Christ by the governing Creator in reward of his Obedience and Sufferings, and promised to himself for the sake of Christ in the Gospel upon his believing with that Faith which it appoints, is to be absolved, pardoned, accepted as righteous, and saved.

From this Rule of Judgment is easily inferred that justifying Sentence, on which our State is changed, viz. "Thou art that true Believer, whose Absolution, Pardon, Acceptance as righteous, and Salvation, were promised to Christ in the Covenant of Redemption, and to thy self personally in my Gospel; and therefore thou art adjudged to be absolved, pardoned, accepted, and an Heir of Glory, by virtue of that Promise made to Christ, and the Gospel-Promise made to thy self; and hast a Title to plead Christ's perfect Obedience and Sufferings for thy certain enjoyment thereof, which will also be continually pleaded by Christ thy Advocate."

In like manner we see, Constitutive Justification is our being made such Believers, through the Influence of the Spirit of Christ, as fall under the foresaid Promise made to Christ in the Covenant of Redemption, and the Gospel-Promise made to our selves, and so are conformed to the Rule of Judgment, but yet are considered as not judicially sentenced according to it. Again, Passive Justification is no other, than our Persons and State considered as affected by that Sentence, as already pass'd upon us, viz. absolved, pardoned, accepted as righteous, and entitled to Glory. Finally, Executive Justification is no other, than God's dealing with us as Persons so absolved, pardoned, accepted, and entitled to Glory, and his performing whatever is included in the justifying Sentence, yet in the way, time, manner, and limits which the Gospel declares.

Redemp-

§. 9. The Consideration of the Rule of Judgment as before explained, led me to affirm, that the Justification of a believing Sinner is equivalent to a twofold Justification, the one at our Creator's Bar, the other at the Redeemer's; the first, by the imputed Righteousness of Christ; the other, by that of Faith; which I have insisted on in the Postscript to Gospel-Truth, pag. 496. & seq. And being desirous to prevent mistakes in this Point, (which I think is probable to prevent furious Debates concerning the Doctrine of Justification,) I'll give a few hints of fuller thoughts about it; premising only, that I hoped none would think, think, that I said there is a twofold justification, for I make the sentence to be but one, tho' that includes what's equivalent to a twofold justification; nor yet that I denied Christ as of one essence with the Father to be Creator, or said there be two actually existing bars. But these are things too low for many words.

[1.] I consider God at our first formation as our Creator, governing men by a law suited to their rational, innocent, and perfect nature; by which law he promised life to sinless obedience, and threatened death for all disobedience. God considered in this relation cannot be apprehended to enact a Gospel-law, with a promise of pardon and life to the imperfect, tho' sincere, faith of sinners.

[2.] I consider this Creator offended by man's violation of his holy law. Under this notion, (1.) He condemns the sinner unless satisfaction be made, and excludes him from life unless purchased by one capable of meriting it. And, (2.) He would reject faith, and every work of a sinner, as what could not be satisfactory or meritorious; this offender being incapable to satisfy for the least fault, or to merit the least blessing.

[3.] I consider our Mediator transacting with our offended creating law-giver in the covenant of redemption; wherein, (1.) Our governing Creator demands...
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. mands of Christ, if he would save Sinners, that in their Nature he must obey the violated Law, and endure Death, and what was equivalent to its threatened Punishment, in their stead. (2.) He declareth, that this Obedience, and these Sufferings of this Mediator, considering the Dignity of his Person, should be accepted for Satisfaction for Sin, and for the Merit of eternal Life, and of whatever subserved Sinners obtaining thereof. (3.) He promiseth Christ as a Reward of his Obedience and Sufferings, that whoever of fallen Men should believe on him, should be absolved, pardoned, accepted as righteous, and eternally glorified, for the sake of what he was to do and suffer; and that a certain number should believe on him, and so be absolved, &c. to his Glory, and he have all Power, Authority and Judgment committed to him. (4.) Christ our Mediator covenanteth to do and suffer what was proposed, and accepts of the said Rewards. (5.) In due time Christ performs his Undertaking, and becomes intitled to the said Rewards, and invested in a right there to; with respect to which, he is said to be justified. (6.) His Undertaking is allowed to operate as if performed, at least from Adam's Fall; and thereby his Kingdom, and the saving Effects of his Obedience and Death antecedent his obeying and dying. (7.) Whatever concerned the Sinner's Salvation, tion, was to be founded upon the satisfactory and meritorious Death and Obedience of Christ our Mediator. And thus, (8.) Man is to be considered under the first Head, as an innocent Subject in a state of Trial, according to the Law of works; and under the second Head, as a Sinner obnoxious to the Curse of the Law, past Relief by his own Merit; and yet, upon Christ's Satisfaction (pursuant to the Covenant of Redemption in this third Head,) as savable notwithstanding the Curse of the Law.

[4.] As an effect of this Transaction, I not only consider Christ our Mediator under the notion of a Redeemer, (as all will grant him to be in an especial manner, because he alone paid the redeeming Price;) but I consider also the Creator to be Redeemer, as he gave his Son to be a Saviour, accepted the Satisfaction made by him, promised to him the foresaid Rewards, and so far executed them as to invest him in his Office of an accepted authorized Mediator, admitting his Kingdom to commence, (as well as his Death to operate to saving effects,) before he actually died, &c. Upon these and the like accounts, I apprehend the blessed God, considered essentially, (tho' the Father eminently bears the Title of Creator, and sustains the Dignity of the Divine Essence and Government in proposing the Terms, and receiving Satisfaction,) to stand towards us in the relation of a Redeemer.
Peace with Truth; or

Chap. Redeemer, who hath received Satisfaction, transacting with us in and by our Mediator, in whom he is well pleased.

Our Creator being considered thus as God in Christ, who is satisfied as to the Violation of his Law, (the Honour of his Government being vindicated, and the Ends of it secured, tho' Pardon and Life be granted to Sinners;) it will follow, that in a consistence with rectoral Justice, he can so far suspend the Curse of the Law towards sinful Man, and exert his Mercy, as,

(1.) To be willing to admit to Peace and Favour, all whom Christ shall present to him. (2.) To be ready to forgive our Offences. (3.) To make Offers of Peace, Pardon, and Salvation to lost Sinners, begging them to be reconciled, &c. (4.) To return his expelled forfeited Spirit, to strive with and work on dead Sinners in order to their acceptance of this offered Salvation. And, (5.) To be long-suffering, and waiting to be gracious, in the use of fit methods and means to conquer their Resistance. These, and the like, immediately ensue upon Christ's Satisfaction: And if men intend but Instances of this kind, when they say, God was reconciled to us by the Death of Christ before Conversion, we should allow it; yet intreating them to note, that the Curse suspended thus far, and the Curse removed by an actual Interest in saving Blessings, are very distinct, as be Forgiveness with God, and Forgiveness be-flowed on us: And yet I fear, many do IX. detraet from this Benefit, viz. that there is Forgiveness with God for guilty Sinners, and Salvation for undone Apostates; which is in it self a higher thing, than that this or that man is Partaker of it, tho' our personal Advantage consisteth in the latter.

[5.] I CONSIDER God in Christ as Re-deeemer, making his Offers of Salvation to Sinners, and stating the Conditions upon which he will give the merited Pardon and eternal Life personally to them; commanding their acceptance, with a Promise of applying Christ's Satisfaction in those effects upon their Compliance, and denouncing their abiding under Guilt and Mifery, with forer Punishments, if they finally refuse. This is by the Gospel: To expli-cate which, Note, (1.) Compliance is enjoined by a governing Authority, tho' with a display of Grace: It supposeth Christ's Sacerdotal Offering over, and is an Instrument of Government resulting from a Dominion acquired as Redeemer; and therefore may well be called a Law, yea, and that by which he will judge us. (2.) The Historical account of Christ's Offices, Ful-ness, Love, Death, and of Man's Misery;
the displays of Covenant-Benefits present and eternal, the revelations of Divine Truths and Mysteries, Gospel-Institutions, and Directions whence to derive Grace, &c.

are all to subserve our due acceptance of this Offer. (3.) If Christ had not proclaimed Pardon and Life to Sinners, we had not known that these were to be obtained by any of us. If he had not declared, that he gave Pardon and Life to such as have Faith, and none else, we had not been certain whether it were the Believer or Unbeliever were pardoned: If he had not told us, he gave Faith and then Pardon, there had been no known Order of these Gifts: If by his Gospel God had not offered Pardon to all if they would accept it, commanding their acceptance in order to it, promising it upon their acceptance, and determining to judge men as they accepted or refused, then there had been only an Order in giving Faith and then Pardon, but Acceptation had been no Condition nor Righteousness, nor had Man been justifiable by it, or condemnable to the want of Pardon for rejecting it. (4.) Acceptance of offered Salvation, tho' a Righteousness, supposeth a meriting Righteousness of Christ; and can be no higher a Righteousness, than a performed Condition of a Law of Grace, by which Benefits already impetrated are given: Which Law differs not from a Deed of Gift, but that the Donor expresseth a governing Authority in the method of applying these Blessings, and resolves to judge them to whom that Offer is made, by their acceptance or non-acceptance.
An End to Discord.

Our Right adjudged upon our acceptation, is a Right of Grace and Mercy; and tho' infallible, it can infer no Claim of Debt. (6.) This Acceptation is described by the Gospel; and nothing is an Acceptation upon which we shall receive the offered Blessings, if it be not in its Principle, Nature, Extent, Operativeness and Duration, such an Acceptation as the Gospel doth promise its saving Benefits to: (7.) Tho' this Acceptation merit nothing, yet Christ's Righteousness being ordained to merit Salvation for such as shall accept of it, and this Acceptance being the Gospel-ordained Condition of our personal Interest in that merited Salvation, we cannot be saved without either of them. (8.) To prevent mistakes I add, the Elect shall infallibly be brought savingly to accept of this Salvation.

[6.] I consider God, applying Pardon, Peace, Adoption, &c. to men that have accepted of this Salvation, according to the Gospel-offer. And herein, (1.) He acts as a Judge. (2.) The Relations he stands in are, as Creator, and Redeemer; the first ceaseth not, tho' the other is superadded. (3.) The Cause is adjusted by the Rule of Judgment described in §. 8. And this Cause partly refers, to what satisfied the offended Creator for this Sinner's Fault, and merited Salvation for this forfeiting Rebel: Here Christ's Righteousness

Chap. IX. is the only justifying Righteousness; Faith hath no place in God's regard, who as Creator judgeth in this matter. The Cause is partly also; "Is this a true Accepter of Salvation, for whom Pardon, Peace, and Glory were promised to Christ in the Covenant of Redemption in reward of his satisfying, meriting Death and Obedience, and to whom these were promised in the Gospel?"

Here Acceptation is a Righteousness, the want whereof Christ's Righteousness is not appointed to supply; and the adjudging a man a Believer, intitled to Pardon, Peace, and Glory, upon the Satisfaction of Christ, I call active Jusification, or the Judge's justifying Sentence.

[7.] I call it a Justification at the Creator's and Redeemer's Bar.—I call it so at the Creator's Bar, as far as the Sentence refers to what vindicated the Honour of God's violated Law, secured his governing Authority as our Maker, and merited the Blessings, before which there was no Pardon, Peace, or Glory for the Sinner, tho' a Believer; none to be offered, none to be had by accepting. Nor is it a needless thing, that the justifying Sentence have an express Regard to what that refers to, viz. Christ's Righteousness: For as it was the alone Condition of Christ's Impetration of Pardon, Peace, and Life for Sinners, so when these are to be adjudged to the Sinner, the Honour of the Creator, of the violated lated Law, and of Christ's Satisfaction, Chap. is wisely provided for, by an express acknowledge ment of, and reference to that Righteousness.—I call it a J u t i f i c a t i o n at the Redeemer's Bar, as far as the Sentence refers to our Acceptation, or Faith, as a Righteousness; for the unsatisfied Creator, who governeth and judgeth by the Law of works, could make no Offers of Pardon and Glory to Sinners, if they would accept, nor admit Faith to be a Righteousness; and yet, considered as a Redeemer, (as God was, when he had received Satisfaction,) he could not again demand a satisfying, meriting Righteousness to acquit the Believer now upon; no, nor require Faith, (unless under the notion of a Redeemer,) as a proper Condition of Pardon, &c. because in the Covenant of Redemption it was promised to Christ for Sinners as merely described by Faith. But God in Christ as Redeemer could make the Gospel-offer of Pardon upon condition of Acceptation, en-j o in g that Acceptance, and promising thereto the Pardon impetrated by Christ; and so that Acceptation is referred to in the justifying Sentence of God in Christ as Redeemer, as what discriminates one Man who obtains the Pardon according to the Gospel-Promise, from him who is judicially debarred of it.

[8.] I think, they who are altogether for Faith as the only imputed Righteousness
Peace with Truth, &c.

Chap. Righteousness in Justification, do too much contract the justifying Sentence, by excluding that distinct Respect which ought to be to the Satisfaction and meriting Obedience of Christ, whereby God as our governing Creator can admit the Absolution of a Sinner. And they who are altogether for the Righteousness of Christ as only imputed in Justification, do also too much limit the justifying Sentence, by excluding the Gospel-Righteousness of Faith, which the Redeemer regards, and by which he judicially discriminates who among them, to whom Salvation was offered, shall obtain it, and who of them shall not obtain it. May these Hints contribute to an Agreement between these worthy Persons, or at least incline all to Christian Forbearance, and I shall reckon it worth all my Labour and Sufferings. Oh that the God of Peace would give us Peace by any just means!

A Catechism for Youth.

Printed in the Year 1691.
TO THE CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE, WHO Were Hearer of the following SERMONS.

THE design of these Sermons was to regulate and improve the state of your souls. The blessing of God having made them successful to several of you, inclined me to publish them at your importunity; tho' I do oft refuse a compliance with many judicious friends, in desires of the same kind, even when the subjects are more persuading.

Having overcome the discouragement which I suggested to my self, from the plainness of these discourses, I dare not make an apology for the commonness of the stile or matter.
To the Young People, &c.

matter. It had been a profanation of an ordinance, when desired to preach to youth, to propose any subject below what tends to their salvation from that sin and wrath they are naturally under. It had been folly, to treat of such a subject for edification before children and apprentices, in words unapt to inform or persuade them. I thank God, I could rather bear the dislike of a few less serious wits, than neglect the eternal concerns of so many less intelligent bearers. On the same account, I am now afraid to raise the file, or omit the very repeated appeals and pleadings with children; being resolved to approve my self to the weakest reader, and leave the judicious to what is more fitted to their improvement.

My prayer and hopes are, that God will accompany this book with powerful effects on your souls, and not leave you to that obstinacy, as will render it a farther aggravation of your sin and punishment. You cannot pretend, that God never informed you of your Disease, nor directed you to a Cure: You dare not, after reading this book, say, "My danger was concealed from me, and "rules for my safety were not prescribed." God will severely witness, that he condescended to argue matters with thy soul; he dissuades thee from the sins, that will condemn thee at last, however thou now flatterest thy self. He useth many arguments to incline thee to duties, which his very Gospel cannot dispense with the want of, in any person whom he will save.

Let me then acquaint thee, oh young man! that God addresseth himself to thee, as by name. Thou by nature art brutish and devilish, and as long as thou followest the imaginations of thy vain mind, thy case becomes more desperate; thy lusts by indulgence grow more violent, and conscience still less concerned, to vindicate the affronts thou offerest to God's dominion, or to represent the injury thou dost to thy own soul: Yet be assured, whether thou mindest it or not, there is a God, whose right it is to govern thee, and will be sure to judge thee: Thou art born his subject, tho unwilling to obey, and forward to rebel against him. Thou hast an immortal soul, how little soever thou providest for its future state; yea, how much soever thou artest to expose it to endless misery, and this for a short and fading pleasure. Thou art naturally depraved, and thereby under that condemnation, which was passed by the law of innocency against man, in the least sinful.

Oh then, do not fancy, that Baptism did regenerate thee, while thou findest the want of every grace, and carnal inclinations are thy governing law. Do not conceit, that Baptism delivered thee from thy cursed state, when thy unbelief and enmity against holiness, do both express it, and further expose thee to it. It's true, there is a way of salvation salvation for lost man published in the Gospel; but that can benefit none, who continue to reject Christ, and refuse the terms of peace. Thou art the dedicated child of believing parents; but their faith cannot save thee, now that thou art capable of consenting to the covenant, and refusest it; yea, thy early dedication adds perjury and falsehood to thy profaneness. Plead not thy christian name, while thou art a reproach to it. Boast not of religious helps, when they have not that good effect on thee, as the light of nature bath on mere Pagans; which may convince us, that where the Gospel fails to convert its hearers, Satan often governs more powerfully, than if the Gospel had never been preached to them. We live in an age of wonders, among which it is not the least strange or awful, that professed Christians are viler than Heathens, and most of our baptized youths scorn the plainest rules of Christianitv. Ah, wretched age! wherein gospel-light cannot convince of that wickedness, which even nature condemns! What conception have they of God, who think he can approve of such enormities as they commit, or be satisfied with those heartless and trifling regards to which they confine all the homage which they afford him?
To the Young People,

Surely England's calamities are like to be terrible, when this jealous God ariseth to force men to juster thoughts both of his nature and his laws.
To the Young People, &c. 163

I must allow, that this treatise is intended to convince thee of the great evil of such things, as most esteem indifferent, and practise as allowable; yea, so far doth their blindness prevail, that sobriety (much more Godliness) is ridicul'd as folly. But know, that the feeling of endless torments will soon convince such, as dare mock at divine revelations. The perfections, that render God able to endure their affronts now, will oblige him to vindicate his government and honour then. Poor wretches, that would not be ruled by means suited to their natures, as rational, shall without their consent undergo the inflicted evils, which, while only threatned, did not move them. Therefore, young man, be not affrighted from true wisdom by the clamours of the worst of fools, whatever wit they pretend to. Undo not thy self for the sake of a crowd; for it's better be religious with the lesser number now, than be damned hereafter with the multitude.
Sure thou must be an Atheist, and wholly disbelieve unseen things, if the contempt or persuasions of enslaved factors for the devil can incline thee to choose hell, by resolving on the course that infallibly tends to it.

I must acquaint you, that in the last Sermon I add no particular to the notes, one of and supplied me since with, to help the defect of my own papers; yet I have added

The good Lord prosper all to you! Could I but see young ones generally inclined to serious Religion, I should hope, that God hath a mercy in reserve for England; and the vengeance that hangs over it, because of the last thirty years too successful contrivances to debauch the nation, in order to Slavery and Popery, might be diverted, or at least confined to such as are too far engaged, or obstinate, to admit a reformation.

That every child and youth who shall read this book, may (as many of you already do,) thus contribute to my hopes, and share in the benefit thereof, shall be the prayer of

A plain Youth's Catechism. 297
Ecclesiastes 11:10. last clause.

Childhood and youth are vanity.

This present meeting is for the spiritual advantage of you, Children and Young people. Your good we Ministers must intend; and it's your interest and duty to regard, and improve these helps, as well as elder persons; for your souls are as immortal, as the aged. God hath a right to govern you, being you are his creatures. He hath given you a rule of life; he observeth your hearts and carriage with concern. Young ones shall be arraigned at God's tribunal, and judged by the rule contained in his word, according to what they have been and done. Heaven and Hell are before you; one of them will be the eternal dwelling of the youngest in this assembly; and considering, that most of mankind die when young, Heaven and Hell are fuller of young people, than of such as are arrived to a greater age.

Do such considerations affect you? Ought they not to make me serious, and importunate
The Vanity of tunate with your souls? and with yours especially, because youth is under great in-dispositions to all that is serious and saving?

Oh! let us look earnestly for a blessing to him, who is the God of the spirits of all flesh, and therefore is able to impress and manage your spirits, tho' unruly and vain.

The author of this book is Solomon. Will you regard what a great man saith? He was King of Israel in its most prosperous state. Are a wise man's dictates to be heeded? He was the wisest of mere men. But above that, this book was the result of great experience; he speaks his feeling, as well as his judgment; yea, he records these things as a penitent after great offences, and therefore must represent things according to their truth and importance, especially since he was inspired by the infallible Spirit in what he here delivers.

I shall not look farther than the 9th verse, to lead you to my text. Where,

1. He doth by a sharp Sarcasm reprove the sensual delights of young people; Rejoice, O young man, &c. It's such a saying as Christ's to his disciples, Sleep on, and take your rest. It is not said by way of approbation, but he exposeth the sensualist by disdain, which may affect some people more than a direct reproof; and God, for our good, condescends to try all ways. Surely you Childhood and Youth.

you that think sensual pleasure the greatest happiness you are capable of, will suspect, that it is not what it appears to your foolish minds, when God by the wisest man doth thus ironically brand it: He loads you with scorn, while you fondly please your selves with these poor delights, as your only paradise. God keep me from that as my portion, which God accounts my reproach!

Obj. But may not a young man rejoice?

Answ. Yes, no doubt thou oughtest to delight thy self in the Lord; yea, thou Ps. 37 mayest delight moderately and holily in objects of sense; but that’s not the rejoicing here exposed. The following words explain the nature of this forbidden joy; it’s that evil pleasure which thou takeft in walking in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: As if it were said, "Oh vile creature! how base art thou become, that confineft thy pleasures to, "and resolvedly wallowest in, the delights "that come by following the vain imaginations of thy carnal heart, and mere "gratifying thy senses? What a brute art "thou, that sportest thy self in a disre "gard of God and unseen things, and va "luest the time of youth only as it fits "thee to execute what is sinful, and re "lish what is sensual! Is this rejoicing be "coming thee as a reasonable creature, "made for and suited to things of so far a "higher nature? Is thy Correspondence "with The Vanity of Art thou so sunk and buried in flesh? Is there no spiritual light or love, to govern thy desires and pleasures?" If this be the merry young man, what an object of contempt is he in all his mirth? Even in his jollity he is to be scorned, as well as pitied.

2. He alarms this brutal sensualist with a prospect of judgment. God addresseth himself to thee as one stupidly ignorant; But know thou; (it's what thou art little acquainted with, or thoughtful about;) for all these things he will bring thee into judgment. A sore thorn in thy gay clothes, a great cooler to thy lusts, mere gall in thy cups, and a sad disturbance to thy airy conceits: God will bring thee into judgment for all these things. "Tho' thou despise his laws, thou shalt not escape his sentence: He will not leave it to thee, whether thou shalt be miserable, though he referred it to thy choice, whether thou would'st be serious: He'll compel thee to feel his wrath, though he would not force thee to restrain thy voluptuousness. Yea, oh thou that sport'st thy self in thy brutal delights! thou shalt account for all, thou shalt suffer for each. Thy punishment shall be proportioned to thy sins, and to thy pleasures thou didst take in sinning; and dost thou never consider how great that's like to be?"

3. He
3. He then annexeth a serious caution against two evils, to which young persons are obnoxious; ver. 10. Therefore, (1.) Remove sorrow from thy heart; that is, anger, as the word may be rendered, or all those heart-lusts which will end in sorrow of heart. Thou art afraid of seriousness; thou seemest to prevent sorrow by thy carnal mirth: But alas, thou art making way for the deepest groans by thy seeming cure; thou bringest on sorrow by a pretended driving it away. But, young man, God seeing thou takest a wrong course, condescends to warn thee against the anguish which thou preparest by thy vicious inclination. (2.) And put away evil from thy flesh; that is, fleshly pollutions, to which youth is prone; or the bodily punishments, which vile courses expose to.

—if you take the first sense, then, as in forbidding heart-lusts, he stops a course of sin at the spring-head, without which all the attempts for reformation will be too feeble; so in forbidding fleshly pollutions, he would restrain the acting of sin: As if he had said, "Thou' lust is conceived in the heart, yet let it not break forth in thy practice; for abstinence from wicked acts will conduce to change thy temper, and abate thy guilt."—If you take the latter sense, then he argues from that misery, which brutish youth is most likely to be affected by: As if it were said, "That

"That body which thou so indulgest, that flesh whereof thou art so tender, is like to feel the woful effects of thy folly; therefore as thou loves thy very flesh, kindle not the flames which are to devour it in hell; bring not down those judgments, which may torment thy body on this side the grave."

The wise man introduces these advices by a motive referring to ver. 9. Therefore, &c. As if he had said, "Because God will bring thee into judgment, avoid these sins, for which thou shalt certainly be arraigned; and prevent the miseries, which the sentence will include, and which the judge must execute according to the sanction of that law whereby thou shalt be judged. Then, then, O young man! thou shalt know by the punishment felt, that thy lawgiver's threatenings were not vain, tho' during temptations they appeared so."

My text is a further motive, and as such is here inserted: For childhood and youth are vanity; as if it were said, "To these sins your young years are prone; they have room in your temper, and without great care and labour cannot be removed, or put away; therefore be intent and vigorous to put away evil from thy flesh, to remove sorrow from thy heart."

Having thus describ'd the coherence of Childhood and Youth.

of the words, I shall lay them down for a doctrine as they be in my text.

Doct. Childhood and youth are vanity.

I shall explain this doctrine, and then insist on that sense of the words, which will most conduce to the advantage of young persons.

[1.] Childhood and youth may be taken for that time of human life, which is short of manhood.

If you take it thus, then the whole clause may be thus expressed: "Though you are very apt to boast of these years, as most conducive to happiness; tho' now your spirits are vigorous, your bodies healthy and strong, your senses quick, the cares and maladies of old age are far from you; yet all this will not make you happy: This time of youth itself is vanity; it's insufficient to make thee a blessed creature; yea, though thou didst enjoy all sensible things that can minister to its satisfaction, it is but vanity; a poor thing, a short and empty matter, which leaves its admirers deceived, yea, undone, if they have no better provision." A serious old man disdains those years, and would not live them over again; yea, few live long, that with not much of that time expunged expunged out of their life, and remember it with a blush.

[2.] Childhood and youth denote persons of those years or age, viz. children and young people.

I shall consider the words in this sense; and of such of you the Spirit of God proclaimeth vanity, as your proper epithet. But,

Ques. What is meant by vanity, as it is predicated of these young people?

Ans. Vanit y is either natural or moral: And thus it's the same as to say,

(1.) Young people are frail and mor-

Heb. ix. 27. Rom. viii. 10.

Isa. xi. 6. tal. All flesh is grass, and all the goodness thereof, as the flower of the field. The robust youth hath his breath in his nostrils; by the course of nature he may live longer than old men, yet by the frailty of nature he may die before the oldest man. Thou reckonest upon long life, but thou mayest die to morrow. Oh young man! thou hast the seeds of death in thee, thou canst not resist any messenger of death; the sentence lies against thee; and sin, the cause of death, cleaves to thy early age. What variety of accidents art thou subject to every moment? It's by God's power, you children are alive till now, as well as the man of eighty. Oh young folk! that think of many years, before death and you can meet; how many younger younger than you are already rotten in their graves? There may be many children in this place, whose death your fathers, yea, grandfathers may live to mourn for? it's a brittle house your very souls inhabit.

_Exh. I cannot omit this exhortation._ Do and forbear, all you ought to do and forbear, in order to eternity, as persons within a step of death. I hope the youngest here are assured, that there is no working in the grave. What is to be done for eternity, must be done while you live; the state of trial lasts no longer than life: Whatever is beyond the grave, is unchangeable reward or punishment.

_Wilt thou lay to heart these things?_ (1.) I have much to do for eternity. (2.) Work for eternity is hard to do. (3.) This work as hard as it is, must be done, or I perish for ever. (4.) How short a while may I, as young as I am, have to do all this hard work in? which is the point I am upon. Young man, if death overtake thee, thou canst not put it off till thou set about the work thou hast neglected; all the cries in the world will avail nothing. Bethink thee then, if Abijah had not been good betimes, he must have been eternally undone: So it may be thy case, O child of ten years old! if thou dost not get grace before thou art a year older, or it may be a month or week older, thou must die graceless. Doth not the

the word tell thee of some, who die in youth, and their life is among the unclean? Shall that be thy case? canst thou bear it? Be persuaded now to fix thy thoughts on such things as these: "Shall I lye or swear now, who may be dead within a month? Dare I profane this sabbath, who may be dead within a week? yea, my next sin may be the last act of my life. How can I live without Christ a day longer, when I may die to night? Shall I delay to know, and love, and fear my God, who must do it soon or never? I am sure, If I do not fear God before I die, Hell will be my place; and I am not sure of a week to attain this fear of God." Did the youngest of you know your frailty, you would tremble at delays; you would not dare to sin; you would blush at your slothfulness in any good work. Oh then hear this sermon, as one that may never hear another! Pray the next time, as one that may never pray again! When thou art next tempted, ask thy self, "Would I yield to this, if I were to die to-morrow?" Will you believe this, and walk as them that believe it? Even youth is too uncertain, for any wise one to venture to sin, or neglect his salvation, as if sure of time to repent, and repair his neglects.

(2.) Vanity is taken in a moral sense, viz. as it regards the minds and manners.
Thus the Spirit of God warns us against walking in the vanity of the mind. Vanity is oft put for all sins: Yea, several sins are expressly called vanity; and this name is applied, partly with respect to the nature of some sins, but chiefly from the tendency and consequence of every sinful course. Every way of sin is vain; and sin deserves the name of vanity from this consideration, that it is committed to no valuable purpose; yea, it ends in what is destructive, and far worse than merely unprofitable.

In this sense I shall improve the Text, and it includes these things.

First, Young people are prone to many sins, that are notoriously vain.

Secondly, Young People are apt to live to very low and unprofitable purposes, which is vanity.

Thirdly, Young people are apt to live to evil and destructive purposes, which is the height of vanity.

Before I enter on these things, let me ask you young folk, Is not this a true charge? and is it not as awful a description of your state, as it is true?

Obj. But how comes this to be laid so universally, that young people are thus vain?

Answ. 1. Because the generality of young young people are vain. For one that is sober, how many are wild? for one that is pious, there be many prophane. A religious child is become a wonder. Godliness in youthful years is very rare; the body of your ordinary young people is sottish; the generality of witty youths are atheistical and irreligious. When the disease is so common, the charge is proper as against the whole.

2. All young persons are inclined to be vain: Vanity is the temptation of that age. Your constitution, and want of experience, do especially expose you to this mischief. Though grace may deliver some of you from the power of vanity, yet it hath not cleansed you from all disposition to vanity; it hangs about you, and liveth, though restrained. Your stumblings will be at this stone, and your faults will be under this head of youthful vanity.

Young people! you see why the charge is so common: Will you then apply what I shall say to your selves? When I describe this disease, say, "This is my disease." When I propose the remedy, speak to thy soul, "This is proper for my case, this is necessary to my condition." Thou child, say, "I am a child, and therefore apt to be vain." Thou young man, say, "I am a young man, and therefore I am apt to be vain: I must deny my age, or own this charge." Nay further, reason awfully
Childhood and Youth.

awfully with your selves, "Most young " people are under the power of vanity;
" the wicked youths are a hundred, to " one that is pious. Oh my soul, what " is my condition! is there not more dan" ger, that I am one of those hundred " wicked ones, than that I am that one
" pious young one?"

I shall now return to consider the three particulars, under which I included the moral vanity of young people.

First, Young people are prone to many sins, that are notoriously vain.

There be some particular sins, that in their nature argue more vanity than other sins; they infer a very vain mind in the persons committing them. Young ones have many of these sins, and lust is strongly prompting them thereto.

I shall reduce your sins to eight particulars, and give you some directions under each, to help you against that particuar sin: But remember, each of these are sins; Every sin defileth thy soul, and bindeth thee to undergo the punishment threatned, if it be not repented of and mortified: Nor canst thou hope, that these sins will be put away, unless thou follow the methods God hath directed for that end: He will not convert thee as a brute that regards nothing, tho' he must consider thy weakness as a sinner, and therefore exert his power by the means thou attendest.

I. Young people are subject to folly. The Spirit brands our tender years with this crime: Folly is bound up in the heart of a child. Is this limited to children? No, A young man void of understanding, is too often seen. This fault is not a want of that wisdom which is unexpected from your age; but it is such a folly, as in your years might have been healed; and it's made up of blindness and mistakes, against that light which God hath afforded you.

God hath given you reason to govern your selves by; you are under the means of wisdom, whereby you may know your true end, and the proper means to that end. Nevertheless, most young persons are fools. Doft not thou place thy interest in things which are vain and destructive? Doft thou not think jollity thy only heaven, and the pleasing thy lusts the only real paradise? What is enjoying God, or glorifying God, to thee? These are things thou art unacquainted with, and unconcerned for.

Obj. Perhaps thou wilt say, "I desire to be saved, and I do something towards it; how then do I mistake my end or means?"

Answ. I. I fear, thou dost not know, what it is to be saved. Salvation with thee is is only being kept out of hell, as a place of torment, when thou hast finn'd thy fill: But there is little more to commend heaven to thee. If there be not vain sports, revelling, and the like carnal enjoyments, thou canst not tell how heaven should be a happy state, tho' better than hell. But is not this the grossest folly? What, to think that salvation, which contains no vision of God, no perfect holiness of heart, no full conformity to Christ, no ravishing sense or communications of the divine love, no hand in God's praises? Foolish youth! there's no heaven, but what principally includes these; that is not salvation, which wants any of these. Let me ask thee, "Art not thou foolish, if thou "judgest salvation to be what it is not? Art "thou not foolish, to think it to be another "thing than God describeth it to be? Art "thou not a fool, who fanciest, that can- "not be a happy state, unless it wants "what all good men account to be hap- "piness? and unless it includes such "wicked and brutish things, as heaven "must keep and cleanse us from?" Oh poor creature! thus foolish do thy notions of eternal life discover thee to be.

2. Thy folly appeareth, in that thou fanciest thou canst be saved in another way, than that which leads to it. To convince thee of this, consider, life. He as a Priest, by offering up himself, merited life for such as repent, believe, and obey him: He as a Prophet teacheth men the author, means, and nature of the terms of life: He as a King applies his purchase by the Spirit, subdues impediments, fits the soul for, and judiciously admits it into glory. Now, child! dost thou hope to live for ever, and neglect Christ? Is it not folly, to expect life, and to despise a Saviour, yea, to trample his blood under thy feet? Is it not folly, to hope to be saved by Christ, and yet to believe the devil rather than him, and to prefer the dominion of others before his government?

(1.) Christ is the principal way to John xiv.

N 4. 6.

(2.) Faith, repentance, and holiness, are a way to heaven, subordinate to Christ: I say, subordinate to Christ, for they could not save thee but for a Christ. Sinners had never obtained them, but by a Christ; and they tend to save, as they refer to Christ, whose atonement is the only purchasing price. But yet, they are a way to life; no man shall ever get to heaven without them. Christ hath resolved, that without faith, no man shall have pardon by his merits; and therefore all the savingly enlightened do believe, that they may be justified. He appoints us also to repent, that our sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come; and limits the number of the saved, to such as obey him.

Now young man, is it not folly in thee?
to expect heaven, when thou hast nothing which Christ has instituted as a means of that glory? Doth he as our law-giver declare, that he will and must suspend thy salvation till thou believe; and wilt thou madly say, "He will save me though I do not believe?" Dost thou know what he'll do, better than himself?

Yea, your folly is greater, in that Christ hath not only suspended life on these conditions; but he hath expressly declared, that they shall for ever perish, who do not in these things submit to him: And yet thou art confident.

What greater folly, than for an unholy one to look for glory? when God faith, Without holiness no man shall see the Lord; and the wicked shall be turned into hell. Is it not folly, to remain impenitent, and yet be in hopes of heaven? when Christ faith, Except you repent, you shall all perish. Will not you own your madness, that look'd for life in your disobedience? when you shall hear our Lord saying, Slay these mine enemies, who would not that I should reign over them. Is it not an established rule under the gospel, He that believeth not, shall be damned? Unbelief and hell are as certainly connected, as faith and heaven.

3. Thy folly appears yet more, in that thou fanciest thou canst be saved, in a way contrary to salvation, and certainly leading to hell. Wouldst not thou judge him a fool, that intending for Dover, yet chuseth the road to York? Are not they fools, who desiring health, refuse physic, and take nothing but poison? Thy behaviour exceeds the grossest of these instances.

What bars any one from heaven, but the dominion of sin? And that conscience justly chargeth thee with. Doth not God declare, that to be carnally minded is death? Thou art so minded, and yet expectest life. Is not God express, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of God? Shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone? Is he not as positive, that no fornicator, reviler, thief, or drunkard, can be saved? What can be plainer, than that in being such as these thou destroyest thy self? These vices lead to destruction, and God warns thee against foolish self-deceit, by hoping for a better issue than ruin by such a course. Oh foolish youth! will theft, drunkenness, swearing, profaneness, (think you,) lead to heaven, after all these discoveries of God's resolves? What will damn thee, if such vices will not? Who can be damned, if thou be saved? Will a provoked God lye for thy fake? No, no, his threats will take hold of thee, notwithstanding thy silly dreams.
Children, you see I have described the folly of all young ones, who are wicked. And this I have shewn in this great instance, viz. They mistake their true happiness, and the way to it.

I might open this great sore beyond this. Alas! young people are generally ignorant of God, and themselves; they know neither good nor evil aright; they commend what they ought to dispraise; they choose what they should reject; they make a mock of the greatest mischiefs, as sin and hell; they rarely understand men, or know how to carry it aright, for this world, or for eternity; they mistake truth for error, and are governed by appearances rather than realities. Where shall I stop, if I attempt a full display of the folly of youth?

Quest. What shall I that am young do, to heal me of my folly?

Ans. (1.) Beg wisdom of God by fervent prayer: If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask it of God, &c. Thou wantest wisdom, thou art bid to ask it: Thou art encouraged to ask; for he giveth it to such as ask; yea, he gives liberally, and will not upbraid thee with thy past folly, when thou settest thyself to get wisdom. Nothing will heal thy folly but wisdom, and a prayerless creature is never like to obtain it: Therefore press thy soul with the sense of its want, and with the loveliness and necessity of wisdom; this will help help thee to strong desires, which are fervent prayers. O child! wilt thou be a fool for want of praying? Shall God say, "Here's a youth void of wisdom, because he would not ask it?"

(2.) Study and believe the Scriptures. If thy judgment be directed by the word, it will be found; for that gives understanding to the simple. Before you learn to read; and when you can read, read the scriptures most. There you must learn to think aright of God; they will teach thee, what the will of God is; the way of salvation is there discovered; from them thou hast the truest account of sin, and holiness. In the written promises thou wilt know what to hope for; in the threatenings, what thou shouldst fear; in the commandments, what thou must do; in the revealed doctrines, what thou shouldst believe. Come, children, you are allowed to learn the scriptures. Timothy is commended for knowing the scriptures from a Child. Study you these; there is nothing needful for a Christian, which is not contained therein; every thing as to salvation is doubtful, which is not deduced from these.

(3.) Suspect thy first thoughts, and never be governed by thy fancy. If thy sudden imaginations be right, they will bear enquiry; if they be wrong, they need amendment. Ordinarily the first dictates proceed proceed from vanity; and shall that prescribe, when life and death depend on thy resolves? Nay, how knowest thou, but that they be Satan's whispers which thou executest, when fancy is thy guide? for he speaks to the soul by impressing the imagination.

(4.) Converse with the godly wise, and strictly observe and lay up their sayings and examples. The word tells us, He that walketh with wise men, shall be wise; but a companion of fools shall be destroyed. Their speeches will instruct, their practice will allure imitation; whereas ill company will debauch thy mind, and nourish thy lufts.
Prudent persons will judge thy temper by thy associates; well knowing, thou art already, or wilt certainly be, what thy cho-zen companions are.

(5.) Design all knowledge in order to practice, and live up to the light thou receivest. He that in sacred things takes up with notions for notions sake, is as truly a fool as if he knew nothing. It's a practical judgment that makes us spiritually wise, when other knowledge will aggravate our sin and woe.

Oh young man! wilt thou say unto wisdom, thou art my sister? Wilt thou cast off folly with indignation, as thy great difease? Should you be fond of that which sin introduced, and which obstructs your healing while it prevails? Folly is the bane of intellectual beings; and that's of the worst sort, which guides our practice. Folly is the root of all your other sins. Wert thou spiritually wise, thy work were more than half done; and methinks, thou shouldst not be hardly persuaded to get wisdom. Child! wouldst thou be willing to be an idiot? Surely no; every one pities such a one, and is too apt to laugh at him. But I tell thee, to be a fool as to eternal things, is much worse than to be an idiot. The idiot hath few, if any, actual sins to answer for; but thou hast many. There may be hopes of an idiot's salvation, especially if he be the child of a believer; but if thou remain spiritually a fool, there's no hope of thee, tho' both thy parents were the best of people. All folly is the blemish of human nature, but spiritual folly most of any.

II. Young people are subject to inconsiderateness and rashness. How hard is it, to make you think, or lay the greatest things to heart? Neither danger, nor duty, do young ones apply to themselves. Would not the consciences of most of you agree with my accusation, if I tell thee, child, and thee, young man or woman, Thou art under God's wrath, but wilt not consider it? Thou dost not meditate on the way of recovery, tho' it be at great expense provided: Christ died for thee, but thou
Childhood and Youth.

thou hast not spent one hour in the contemplation of him: Thou art loth to think, what thy ways are, whether good or bad; or thy state, whether safe or dangerous. How few young ones here have seriously asked themselves, "Am I born " again or no? what will my sins bring " me to? what evil is there in my " sins? when I must stand at God's tri" bunal to be judged, what shall I answer? " what is like to be the issue? how shall " I dwell with everlasting burnings?"

It is too commonly with others, as it was with that young man, *He goeth after her straightforward, (or suddenly,) as an ox goeth to the slaughter, till a dart strike through his liver; as a bird bafteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life. He took not time to think, what would be the issue of sin: Unavoidable torment gives the first prospect of his danger; when consideration would have represented this misery, as a guard against sin, even while temptation solicited.

Quest. What shall I a young one do, to deliver me from this inconsiderateness?

Answ. In general, Strive to consider, and bind thy mind to suitable and fixed thoughts. To this end,

(1.) Do not at any time allow thy thoughts to wander unaccountably. It's hard to confine them at any time, when they usually rove. It's a great help for this world,
The Vanity of world, and for another, to have our thoughts manageable; and our souls capable of being easily fixed in their contemplations. Whenever thou thinkest, be able to say, "What I think of is worth a thought."

(2.) Awe thy soul with the importance of the things thou oughtest to consider. If they be soul-matters, they be of the highest nature; and they be of the greatest concern to thee. Tell thy self, "Life and death depend on these: If sin have dominion over me, I shall die; if I am not born again, I cannot enter into the kingdom of God. And shall I lightly "think of these? what's all the world to "me, if I perish for ever? Things divine, things on which eternity depends, "must be considered. Oh my soul! wilt "thou, yea, darest thou, refuse to dwell "on these, which thou wert made for, "which thou must shortly converse with, "as the only realities, whether thou wilt "or no?"

(3.) Get so much knowledge of what thou shouldst consider, as that thou mayst be able to represent it to thy mind in some evidence. It's hard to consider long, of what we little know: If it be of God, be not unacquainted with his nature; if it be of Sin, be not ignorant of arguments to dissuade from it, and a sense of what aggravates it, &c.

(4.) Learn to discourse with thy self, and
Childhood and Youth.

and to urge things upon thy heart: This will fix thy thoughts, and bring things with some due impression on the heart. If thou canst not debate the matter inwardly, speak outwardly with thy tongue, as if two persons were in talk together. "What, shall I lose my soul for a lust? " Must not I, if God's word be true, rue " my present course?" It is God's charge, that you commune with your own hearts. He Psal. iv. 4.

can neither be true nor profitable to himself, who seldom speaks to himself.

(5.) Take fit time and place to debate, and apply things of most concern, and bring things to a good conclusion. Great things must not be determined by a few thoughts; for so thou wilt neither pass a right judgment, nor yet be duly affected. Neither are serious matters becomingly considered in a crowd, or when thou art unfit to think: And to consider, without coming to a conclusion, cannot fix thy judgment, or govern thy will and practice. Therefore if the matter thought of be a doubt, press it to a resolution; if it be a duty, consider all arguments, till thy will be fixedly determined to do it; if it be a sin which thou layest to heart, cease not representing the evil and danger of it, before thou feelest thyself resolved against it, and a strong indignation kindled to support that resolve.

Will you resolve to follow these O Rules?
Rules? will you strive to manage your thoughts, and shew your selves willing to be considerate? I am sure thou wilt not refuse, if thou hast a mind to choose aright, to walk safely, or to have the benefit of what God hath afforded by natural light, revelation, or providence, to govern mankind by. Yea, young man, it's impossible to be truly religious, or to answer the great ends of religion, without considering. Oh then! ponder the path of thy feet; maturely deliberate on things that thy thoughts are due to.

III. Young people are subject to be obstinate and heady. This is one of your diseases; you break through restraints, and are regardless of advice; intreaties avail little. Yea, children, though you be compared to tender twigs, do you not discover much stubbornness? Parents command, but you are disobedient; they correct, but you remain obstinate; they persuade and intreat you to be sober, but you are still vain. Masters reprove, but you are still the same. Ministers importunately call thee, (oh young man,) from thy destructive course, but thou passest on, and shuttest thy ears against the word. Conscience oft speaks, and represents thy guilt, but thou seemest resolved on thy own ruin. Yea, God stands in thy way, as the angel with a drawn sword; but thou art art fearless, and seemest to say, "I will " sin still, let what will come of it: Let Job xv. " guilt grow, let God strike, let my soul " perish, all these shall not alter me."

Oh poor stripling! how soon can God undo thee! how soon will hell-torments break thy stomach! And wilt thou still be like the wild ass, which snuffeth up the wind, and in her occasion, who can turn her away? How canst thou, child, endure to hear thy parents groan, "I persuade my " child to be good, but I cannot prevail; " I would instruct him, but he is un- " teachable? Woe is me, I have brought " forth for the destroyer, when this my " child was born: I see him running " hell-ward, and cannot restrain him: I " tremble to think from his setting out, " what he is like to come to: Oh that " the fruit of my body should dishonour " God, as he is like to do! that he should " do the mischiefs, I foresee he will! If " God change not his heart, he may come " to an untimely end, and is sure to be " damned for ever! Oh that I had been " written childless!" Canst thou be un- " moved, and still perverse?

Ques. How shall a young person be cured of this obstinateness?

Answ. (1.) Get thy heart possessed of a holy fear. Beg of God a heart that is in awe of him; a heart that reverenceth thy parents and superiors; a heart afraid of sin,
The Vanity of

fin, and trembling at hell, and all the other punishments due to sin. Fearlessness is a great ground of obstinacy: Young man, these deserve fear; God hath put this passion into thy nature, to make thee governable. What horrid madness is it, not to fear a God who is a consuming fire? not to fear hell and misery, which will force thee to weep and wail, and gnash thy teeth for ever? What confusion and dis-order is it among mankind, that inferiors are wholly fearless of their superiors; especially sinful worms of a dreadful God?

(2.) Believe the kindness of those, against whom thou art obstinate, and stir up some grateful returns of love to them. Thy perverseness implies, that thou lovest not thy advisers; nor thinkest that they have any love to thee, when they advise thee. But, young body, I would mind thee to day, that it is from love all these opposed admonitions do proceed.

Doth not God love thee, who made thee; who put such bowels in thy parents towards thee? Doth he not love thee, who gives thee all the good thou enjoyest; who spares thee, and intreats thee, month after month, when he might have sent thee to hell at first, without any loss to himself?

Doth not Christ love thee, oh child, who gave his life for thee, when thou wert an undone enemy to him? who sent his Spirit to strive with thee, his Gospel to offer offer mercy to thee, his ministers and others to teach thee, as soon as thou couldst understand any thing? Must not he love thee, young man, who pleads with God, ready to cut thee down, Lord, let him alone this year Luke xiii. longer? Doth not he love thee, that weeps? over thee, when he finds thee unpersuadable; and this, because he knows the woful anguish thy contempt will end in?

Do not thy parents love thee? Oh think what care and pains thy father is at for thy livelihood! Think of the tender bowels of thy mother, what sorrow she hath felt, what fears she is in, when thou art in danger; what tears she poureth forth when thou art sick, and how it goeth to her heart to correct thee! I might shew further, that all others love thee, who advise thee to be good.

Well, young body! canst thou chuse but think, that the reproofs of these must proceed from love? And art thou such a brute, as not to love them at all? What! not love thy God, who is so good to thee? not love thy Christ, who bled out his soul in love to thee? What! not love thy father and mother, to whom thou art so indebted? Wouldst thou be so requited, when thou hast children?

Obj. "I hope, I do love God, Christ, "and my parents: I am not such a de-vil: And I think, they love me."

The Vanity of

Answ. What love them, and be obstinate against their intreaties? love them, and be disobedient in things they most insist on? God and Christ account them enemies, that are rebels: Christ puts it plainly to thee, If you love me keep my commandments; John xiv. 15. as if he should say, Never fancy or talk that you love me, unless you will obey me. Thy parents, if they be pious, will reduce thy love to the same instances:

Thus thy mother bespeaks thee; What my son, and what the son of my womb, and what the son of my vows! give not thy strength to women: And so too, in the next following words, she forbids drunkenness: Thy father charges thee, Hear, my child, the instructions of a father; Let thy heart retain my words, keep my commandments, and live; get wisdom, &c. They will both intreat thee; “Child, if thou hast any love for us, keep from sin; save thy self from hell: We are most concerned, to see thee a real saint, and eternally glorious; we’ll bear any thing rather than sin; we are afraid for nothing so much as thy soul; if thou destroy that, thou shewest the greatest hatred, and art as cruel as thou canst be, to us.”

Canst thou think thou lovest them, and be thus perverse? Nay, if thou think they love thee, that must cause some relentings;
ings: "How can I run so cross to my " God, and to my parents, who so dearly, " love my soul, and are so solicitous for " its weal? My hardened heart begins to " yield, and I cannot continue obstinate; " my love to them, and my sense of " their love to me, do overpower my " stubborn spirit."

(3.) Be persuaded of thy own igno- rance and unfitness to direct thy self. A proud conceit, that you know better than any what is for your good or harm, is included in an obstinate frame. Doft not thou think, that if thou wert convinced, that God bids thee do nothing, but what were for thy good, nor forbids thee any thing but what is for thy harm, thou wouldst do what he commanded, and cease from what he forbids? And would it not be the same as to thy parents and others? Let me then reason with thee, young man! Doft thou think, that God would deceive thee, or thy parents and ministers would lye to thee, when they dissuade thee from sin, and persuade thee to serious piety, and are so earnest in it? Thou must conclude they think as they say: "If they " be not mistaken, they would encourage " me to do as I do; but if I be mistaken, " I ought, and would do as they advise."

Then, young creature, the matter is brought to this: Thou art obstinate against counsel, because thou art in the right, and they that give thee counsel are in the wrong: They, as thou thinkest, advise thee to thy loss; and all things set together, thou consultest thy own true interest better than they do.

But is not this a very vain conceit, and capital error? Oh child! sure thou art not wiser than thy holy parents! They know more than thou, they have experienced what thou hast not; they and thy masters are forced to teach thee the little things of this life; thou wouldst soon spoil and kill thy self, if they left thee to thy own management.

Oh young men and women! are not you sordidly foolish! Can you imagine you know what God will do with you, better than he knows it? do you know what you must lose by sin, and suffer for sin, better than God knows? You judge by a short moment, but he sees what eternity is. You conclude from what your body now feels; but he knows what thy soul is, and what himself is to the soul, whether in wrath or love: He knows what the glory of heaven, and terrors of hell amount to. Thou concludest by thy fancy, but he passeth a just judgment, which every one will soon submit to; therefore I beg thee to distrust thy self, as ever thou wouldst save thy self. Consider, all the good men in the world were conceited as thou art now, but they have repented, and owned owned their folly: When they came to their right minds, then they came to be of God's mind. Yea, all the wicked will be convinced of their mistake; why else will they wail and mourn for ever? If it be best to be in hell, why should they always complain there! The prodigal Luke xv. thought, he was wise when he rioted; but repentance assured him, he had been mad.

Young folk, have you never seen resolved sinners, even in sickness and poverty, roar out and mourn at the last, saying, How have I hated instruction?

Consider, how unlikely is it, that thy Opinion is truer, than that of thy holy master, or minister? Thy lusts darken thy mind: They have all the wise part of the World on their side. Thou canst remember thou wert as confident of other things, which now thou feest to be false, as they told thee then. Thou sometimes now condemnest thy self for thy course, when thy sinful inclinations are calmed. When thou wert sick, thou didn't own, that thy loose way, thy irreligious way, was thy folly: And after all these wilt thou bear it out? Must that be thy character, The fool raiseth, and is confident, while thou knowest not at what thou stumblest? Must this be written on thy grave-stone, He died with out instruction, and in the greatness of his folly be went astray?

(4.) Acknowledge thou art one under dominion, dominion, and not at thy own disposal. People refuse to be subject, from a conceit that they have a right to govern themselves. Is not this your case? Our lips are our own, who is Lord over us? therefore I will lye, swear, talk frothily, let who will contradict.

But, child, thou canst tell who made thee; it was God: And should not he that made thee, govern thee? Ought not the Creature to observe the laws which his Creator gives him? Nothing thou hast is so much thine, as thou art his. Christ bought thee with his blood, and additionally founded his dominion in his purchase: He therefore died, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living: Thou art therefore the most unjust of rebels, if thou art an obstinate sinner.

Thy parents, thy masters, thy ministers, have an authority over thee; and disobeying their just commands and calls, is a renouncing an authority thou shouldst own, and usurping a power, to which thou hast no claim. A masterless child, a masterless youth, is a slave under pretence of liberty; and doubleth his yoke while he seeks to break it. Therefore know, young folk, you'll find God a terrible judge, whom you rejected as a lawgiver: He'll vindicate his own authority, and the deputed authority of your parents, by the sorest vengeance. Eternal chains shall hold that youth, youth, who would attempt to break God's easy bands.

If any of you say, "I do own God to " be my ruler and master;" consider God's challenge: If I be a master, where is my fear? faith the Lord God of hosts.

To finish this, How many sturdy, resolute young people are here? Will none of your knees tremble? Will love melt no heart? Will a sense of God's skill to direct, and authority to command, bend no stubborn Will this day? Dare any child or young person go hence, and say, "I " have been stiff-necked, and will be so; " nor will I follow these rules to become " more persuadable?" If thou haft the impudence to do thus, I have God's warrant to tell thee, Thou shalt suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

IV. Young people are subject to anger and violent passions. Children are apt to be peevish and cross; young men to be full of rage: The clause before the text may be rendered, Oh young man, put away anger from thy heart. How soon is the fire kindled, how fervently doth it blaze? Young persons are oft angry with their best friends, even for what they should be thankful for; they are incensed too frequently without a cause, and are so hasty, as not to search the reason. Slight matters are with them great provocations; and moderation moderation in their resentments they disdain. And no wonder, for thy reason is darkened from seeing the fatal consequences of thy fury. Lasting enmities, quarrels, murders, are too frequently the effects of this inordinate servour.

Young man! is this a thing allowable? Consider with thyself, anger is a short madness. Thou lost the management of thy own soul; whence our Lord commands, In patience possess your soul. An over-heated spirit is void of prudence, and sure to procure bitterness to itself. God faith, He that is soon angry, dealeth foolishly; and truly, he that is very angry, is next to mad; he looks, he speaks, he acts, too near a lunatick. A passionate man is at the mercy of any designing foe, and by indulging his anger becomes his own tormentor. How uneasy to his family, how dangerous to himself, how unfit for counsel, how troublesome to his friends, how insnaring and infecting to society, is a passionate man? May not I hope, you young ones will be out of love with anger? It unmans you, tho' it seems brave: It makes you contemptible with the wife. But above all, argue with your selves, "This my God forbids me: Let all bitterness, wrath, and anger be put away. This will unfit me for the visits of the Spirit, who loves a calm temper, and therefore appoints meekness, as a qualification for "communion
How lovely is patience? It is the height of fortitude: Yea, God faith, He that rules his spirit, is better than he that takes a city; and he that is slow to anger, than the mighty. In a word, a meek and quiet spirit is an ornament, and describes one blessed. How amiable is a patient child! he is more beloved by all, than a froward one. How excellent is that young man, who is master of his passion? He is armed against sudden assaults; he is fit for great services and sufferings; he is fit to use the knowledge he hath attained, in the most dangerous passages of his life.

Question. What shall a young person do to be healed of anger and unruly passions?

Answer. In general, Get the grace of patience, and delightfully accustom thy self to the exercise of it, as what is really thy glory, and no way a reproach. But more particularly,

1. Get thy heart filled with love to God and man. Love to God will incline thee to imitate him, who is long-suffering, slow to anger, kind, full of love, and good to all. Love to man will incline thee to interpret all to the best; to be afraid to hurt him, willing to benefit and forgive him; and not prone to those dislikes, which are unsuitable to thy fellow creature; especially, if the image of Christ be instamped inflamped on him; as you see, 1 Cor. xiii. 4, 5, 7.

(2.) Often present to thy soul the example of thy Saviour, and strive to imitate him. He was humble, meek, lowly, and patient under the greatest provocations. He calls thee to learn of him: And if thou hast any part in him, he hath formed thy soul to some degree of imitation, and to endeavour after more.

(3.) Reckon on provocations, and be still armed against them. Thy own carriage is not so inoffensive, nor are thy acquaintance so innocent, but that thou oughtest to expect some trials: And to expect them, and be unguarded, is folly; neither is it possible to prevent anger, when wholly unprepared: Therefore awe thy soul against passion, and accustom thy mind to such considerations as are fit to restrain thy spirit.

(4.) Be humbly convinced, how mean, sinful, and ill-deserving a creature thou art. Contention is from pride, and he is fondly conceited of himself, who thinks he ought to bear nothing; whereas a due sense of thy own nothingness, and offensiveness to God, will make thee fit to endure much; especially considering, thy provocations from men may be the humbling rebukes of thy God, who must forgive thee great things, if he cast thee not into hell itself; yea, whose decree it is, If you do not forgive, give, neither will he forgive your trespasses. Mark xi. 26.
Childhood and Youth.

(5.) Allow not thy froward spirit a liberty, even where thou hast most power and freedom. He that is not pettish at home, will not be passionate abroad; whereas anger indulged among servants, and in trifles, will expose thee to its power, when more dangerous and indecent.

(6.) When thou feekest anger begin to kindle, forbear to do or say any thing, till thou hast well considered. The cause of thy resentments, if just, will abide the thoughts of a calm temper, and the ways of thy vindication are far likelier to be due; whereas, if the cause in itself is too slight, or thy sudden purposes are too severe to be approved, how darest thou take blind passion for thy guide? Thou must believe, that the discretion of a man defereth his anger.

V. Young people are subject to idleness and waste of time. It's a while before you are fit to learn, or do any thing; but when you are capable, how commonly are you remiss and slothful? Were you left to your selves, what would you do besides eating, drinking, sleeping, and playing? Thou art put to learn, and thou art idle at thy book; not learning in a week, what thou mightest learn in a day, if diligent. Thou art a servant or apprentice, tice, having work to do; but art thou not a waster of that time, which is thy master's, and not thy own; and loth to do the business incumbent on thee? How little is it, most of our youth do for this world, or for eternity? Sports and idleness eat up that season, which is the best opportunity of life; and the character of most young people is, to spend their time in doing nothing. You are idle in the duties of religion, and waste that time you pretend to employ with God. You are idle in your particular callings, as if you had no business as inhabitants of this lower world.

Oh young people! how precious is that time you do mispend? and how sad an account are you able to give of those hours, which are not to be recalled? Will it be comfortable in this world, to reflect on wasted time? Grown years will be full of these reflections: "I might have been a scholar, my knowledge had been improved, I had now been fit to serve my country, and benefit my self and family, had I been studious in my youth: I might have understood my trade, been encouraged in my calling by others, and laid up for my subsistence, had I been diligent and industrious in my youth. But those years are spent in folly, and now I am unteachable; my credit is gone; ignorance, contempt and poverty are
"are my companions: Oh foolish I!"

But, oh thou child! oh thou youth! how much more uncomfortable on a death-bed, and in eternity, will thy idleness and mispent seasons be, as they refer to thy soul? "I had a teachable time, but I die in ignorance of God and Christ: Woe is me! the seasons of grace I enjoyed are my torment now, because I improved them not! I hardened my heart by neglects in my tender years: How have I trifled, when I heard sermons? How have I mocked God, by my sleepy prayers? How have I undone my own soul, by a foolish remissness in all my seeming labours for it? What can I shew for all the years I have lived? To what a case have my sports, my idleness and vanity reduced me? Oh that I could recall my precious time! but that's impossible. Oh that I had profitably employed those mispent seasons! but that's as vain a wish. Oh then that I had never lived those days, which I did not live, but finned away, but that's as vain a wish. Oh then that I had never lived those days, which I did not live, but finned away, as one asleep, or dead in pleasure!"

Darest thou, O young body, for a little present indulgence to thy fleshly sloth, entertain thy self hereafter with such heart-piercing thoughts as these?

Quest. How shall a young person be healed of idleness and waste of time!

Answ. In general, Abhor sloth, and re-

Prov. xix.

P deem.
Sloth is a wicked unaptness for action, and very unsuitable to an active soul. Time not redeemed is mispent; and when it is not applied to its proper work, it passeth away to no advantage. And therefore,

(1.) Enquire what is thy present work, and be assured that what thou art about, is what God would have thee do. Every hour hath its business; if what thou art about be not that business, meddle not with it, but find out what it is thou ought-est to be employed in at that time. Conviction of duty is a spur to diligence.

(2.) Still remember, that God who is thy owner, hath given thee thy abilities, and the time thou hast, to do thy present work. God calls thee as by name, "Use my talents to this, which I have made thy present work; in this thou im- provest the stock I lent thee; in this I will bless thee, and protect thee as one pleasing to me; for this thou shalt not fail of a reward."

(3.) Excite thy self to do what thou art about with vigour. Engage thy strength, call up the powers of thy soul to activity; for the slothful is brother to the waster. Idleness is a degree of omission, in the affairs both of soul and body; for there is much undone, that might have been done.

(4.) To this end consider, God will call call thee to a strict account, how thy work hath been performed in that time which he affords thee. Tell thy self, "There is a time of reckoning for this, that I am now doing or neglecting." The slothful servant is in God's esteem a Mat. xxv. wicked servant; and he that bid his talent must perish, as well as he that mispends it. The more good that might have been done in such a day, will be observed, as well as what little hath been done in that day. Oh never forget, that vacant hours and loiter'd moments are recorded with him, who will not inspect dreamingly, what thy slothful spirit makes no account of. Again, (5.) Remember, that all thy works preparatory for heaven, need an intense spirit, and are confined to a short season. It is proper advice, What thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no working in the grave, whither thou art going. Time is posting, and we had need redeem it, because our business is difficult and the consequences great. There are great things to be acquired and done, before we are meet for glory. There be great oppositions in our nature, and from our tempers, to every degree of that meetness. A vile heart is not easily renewed; darling sins are not soon nor easily mortified; the necessary faith, knowledge, love, strength, and joy are hardly come by;
by; and the expected services in our generation are slowly proceeded in. Haste and eagerness are absolutely needful to such things. He that idleth, can hope for little; and trifling in such matters is little better than downright neglect; especially, when giving diligence is as much a duty, as doing anything. He is not upright in the matters of religion, whose deep concern doth not make him industrious; because his judgment never determined for these things as the greatest; nor hath his will resolved the pursuit of them above all others, whose idleness declarereth his indifferency. Therefore oft tell thy remiss soul, "This day is past; that week is over, and shortly time will be at an end; and shall I idle as I do? How little work is done in past years? Dare I to loiter still, and be further prized, while my works are so imperfect? Or can I reckon on greater improvements in the same number of days, if I be no more intent and industrious than I have been in those?" To thee is that directed, Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord: Resolve then to obey it.

(6.) Be able to give a good account to thy conscience, of the time that's laid out in sleep and recreations. These are the common wasters of time, by a disregard to their just bounds. Many do almost divide their hours between sleep, and recreating.
creating sports, visits, and talk; which three fall under this head of recreation. It's an awful consideration, that what are appointed only to fit men for business, should become with many their only business; as if they had little else to employ themselves about. But know thou, young man, that he who sleepeth longer than health requireth, is a sluggard; and he that lays out more hours in diversions, than prepares him for the better discharge of duty, is a misspender of time. Thy reason should tell thee, "God would never have given me a soul endowed with such abilities for service; he had never placed me in a world full of opportunities and calls to employment; he had never charged me to be diligent and useful; if I am able with comfort to plead my sleep, and pleasures, as the greatest part of my exercise while I lived."

Attend to these rules with care, and from this moment gird up the loins of thy mind, as one determined to run thy Christian race with intenseness and haste.

VI. Young people are subject to levity, and inordinate mirth. This is a common distemper. Your talk is frothy and unflavoury: How far from grave are you, in your carriage, or dress? Vain books thou lovest to read, idle tales thou likest to hear, foolish fights thou art best pleased with,
with, foolish songs thou greedily learnest:
What airy conceits is thy imagination filled with? These thou indulgest, till they become the guides of thy practice, and the chief object of thy thoughts and discourse; to say nothing of thy instability, excessive laughter, vain jestings, merriments, &c.
Oh young ones! is this a temper to be allowed? It is condemned by all prudence; it's contrary to all that is serious, and obstructs all improvements in wisdom. How odious is the character of a vain fellow? How do God and angels despise thee; how do the good and wise compassionate thee?
yea, canst thou refuse to be angry with thy self? Reason a little with thy own soul: "Have I not better things to think of, than these silly matters, which tend to no good for soul or body? Do not these antick gestures make me ridiculoous? What hurt to others, what a wound to my self, comes by this frothy talk? Is not my mind grossly vain, that I can relish such fooleries? Can it ever be bettered, while I employ my self in nothing but what is foolish?" Doth not thou find, that this lightness is even risen to profaneness? Thou canst ridicule the Scriptures, sport with the divinest subjects, and turn the most serious matters into fuel to thy childish conceits. Poor wretch!
God will force thee to be serious, by the torments he'll shortly inflict. Thou wilt be
Childhood and Youth.

be convinced, that thy atheistical thoughts have not put God out of his throne, tho' they cast thee out of his favour. Thy ridiculing of religion hath not made it less real, or necessary, though it hath excluded thee from all the blessings of it. Thy making a mock at sin, hath not a jot lessened its evil, but exposed thee more to the vengeance due to it. Thy jocular temper shall not delay the awful recompence of that contempt, wherewith thou hast treated the gravest matters. What is more fit to make a serious heart bleed, than to see thee jest and fool thy self into eternal flames? How surprising will those torments be to a poor creature, that always disdained a sober thought?

Quest. How shall a young person be healed of this levity and inordinate mirth?

Answ. In general, Follow after sobriety and discretion. The want of these is evident in thy frothy behaviour: And a total want of them is unbecoming thee, in the most early exercise of thy reason; much more in improved age. The gravity of an old man cannot be expected in a child; but a degree of it is necessary to the youngest, that is capable of acting by the notice of a discerning mind. What is thy reason for, but to discern what is meet, direct thee to what is fit, and govern thee in thy carriage according to the rules of thy condition? Discretion will tell... tell thee, that a godly book is more profitable than a play-book; that the soul deserveth more care than a perishing body, which will shortly be meat for worms; and that silly tales edify not, as wise discourses. Sobriety will direct thee, to endeavour a demeanour becoming a man rather than an ape; it will check thee in those jests which discover thy vanity, as well as expose a christian name; it will urge thee to refrain matter of future sorrow, for the sake of that contemptible pleasure which thou takest in indulging a light fancy, while more important things are not regarded. To this end,

(1.) Oft represent to thy self thy condition in this life. Sure it must conduce to seriousness, when thy mind is accustomed to such thoughts, as thy present state suggests. Oh young man! thou art born a child of wrath: Thy nature is vicious, the condemning sentence was passed on thee by the very law of innocency: Death is justly fearful; thou art in a state of trial, and on thy good behaviour for an endless joy or misery. Thou hast contracted much guilt by thy actual enormities and omissions: Satan, the world, and thy own lusts, are active to fix the curse, and prevent thy reconciliation with God, by keeping thee in a state of infidelity, impenitence, and disobedience to the gospel. Thy exercises as a christian are difficult;
Childhood and Youth.

cult; if thou art saved, it must be scarcely: And many endeavours for salvation do prove ineffectual, because a perseverance in so many things is essential to determine thy state. Alas! of many called, how few are chosen? Multitudes of professors miscarry; seemingly strong hopes are oft delusive: The heart is deceitful above all things, and so desperately wicked, that it may well be asked, who can know it? These, and the like things, may call thee to mind thy self, and be a means to lay that froth, which argueth small sense of thy bleeding wounds, and of the slippery paths, disadvantages and dangers, attending thy case in this life, as it leadeth to eternity.

(2.) Deliberately propose a becoming end in all thy words and actions, and let them be conducive to that end. To speak or act thou knowest not why, is a reproach to thy prudence; and so it is, to speak or do things to an end which they are not fit to serve. Neither is it becoming a serious person, to intend that which will put him to the blush, while he deliberates of it. I can hardly think, thou darest say to thy self in thy closet, "I'll spend so many hours to day, in shewing "my own folly, or gratifying another's "madness: I'll lay out my pains, to di- "vert my own mind, or another's, from "all that is serious; to make my heart "vainer

"vainer than it is; to furnish myself with "those false notions of things, which I "must with trouble unlearn before I be "wise; and to strengthen that levity, to "which I am already too prone." Canst thou resolve, "I will spend this week,
"in trimming a poor carcasse, and neglect
"my soul? Let this shift for itself, as to "any care of mine, unless it be to add "to its hurt, by the snares which my vain "conversation shall expose it to." But if thy design be what's edifying, thou canst not imagine a course of foolery will ever accomplish that design. Yea, this very fixing on warrantable purposes, will gradually dispose thee to seriousness.

(3.) Remember thou art still under the observation of such, as should awe thee to sobriety, and make thee ashamed and afraid of a frothy behaviour. Thou wouldn't be ashamed, that a wise friend were acquainted with all thy light fancies and talk, but one day. Oh! forget not, that God trieth the reins, and knoweth all thy thoughts. Poor youth! is not the eye of thy God and Judge, more than all the world? Holy angels are not always strangers to thy carriage, and discourses; and mayst thou not blush at their remarks?
Devils do oft impress thy fancy, and put those things into thee, which thou think-eft and talkest of; these enemies of thine do gladly behold thee unmanning thy self, wounding
wounding thy soul, and corrupting others with thy foolish speeches and actions. Thy silly companions observe thee, and receive the contagion to which their own inclinations make them apt. And is it nothing with thee, that thou conversest with people ready to be diverted from seriousness, and forward to be vain by thy example? Alas! thou becomest accessory to all the evil they shall propagate; and wilt be condemned in their thoughts, if God give them repentance, or cursed by them in hell, if they die impenitent. Thy ungrave deportment sometimes is seen by such as are wise and good; and those despise thee, and pity thy madness, when thou pleasest thy self as being airy and witty.

(4.) Be not an unconcerned stranger to the state of the world, where enough daily occurs to make thee serious. Canst thou be light, and altogether vain, in a world so full of sin and misery? How many dismal objects dost thou see and hear of? what cruelty in one man to another? How oft is the church oppressed? what judgments and calamities are thy neighbours under? what dangers is the land of thy nativity exposed to? Most of the earth lies in ignorance, idolatry, and subject to the devil's empire. How many souls are bemoaning their own sins, and ready to despond under doubts and fears? Where is there a family, but groaneth under

...der some disaster? And canst thou play the buffoon, as if childish toys diverted thee from all sense of these things?

(5.) Awe thy soul with the importance of sacred things, so as not to dare to entertain a light thought concerning them, much less to speak jestingly of them. Every scripture-truth is a beam of divine light; it's revealed by the eternal Spirit to mankind, for to direct their faith and practice: And dare a poor worm that shall be judged thereby, affront heaven by ridiculing its discoveries? Young man! that cannot be matter of jest, which the holy wise God is intent on, and the hearts of all devout persons are deeply exercised with. Are such things to be sported with by man, which the very devils tremble at? Canst thou choose but be seriously affected with the matters of religion, if thou believe, these are the things which the incarnation, sufferings, death, and testimony of the Son of God refer to? These are the things, which great miracles have attested; these are the things, which the various operations of the Holy Ghost on souls design, and the ministry of angels subserves; these are the things, which the devil is so industrious to oppose; these are the things, a gospel-ministry is established for, and about which all pious ministers are so intent and importunate; these are the things, which most affect, and govern all such, such, who are freed from the dominion of their lusts, and can die with hopes; these are the things, which if totally disregarded, expose mankind to all brutish villanies in this world, and endless tortures in another.

(6.) Abstain from the society of light persons, and observe the danger of excessive mirth. There's that levity in thy temper, which infers danger by vain persons; and thou art inconsiderate, if the latter doth not force thee, to say of laughter—Eccl. ii. 2.

It is mad; and of mirth, what doth it? Yea, sorrow is better than laughter; for by the sadness of the countenance, the heart is made better.

(7.) Acquaint thy self with those purer and higher joys, which a serious temper leads to. There be delights of a higher nature, than what thou pursuest; they would soon render these unsuitable to thy taste, as well as contemptible to thy judgment. No holy young man would exchange the feast of his heavenly father, Luke xv. for thy swinish husks; there's no present emptiness, nor following bitterness, in spiritual delights. The sense of God's love, peace of conscience, the lively hopes of glory, the satisfaction of well doing, the serenity of a composed soul, the ease of a rectified nature, as far as the faculties are delivered from sin and healed by grace, do constitute a delight so real and refined, as if thou once taste, will make thee reflect on thy past joys with shame and disdain. See Psal. iv. 6, 7. and Cant. ii. 3, 4.

VII. Young people are prone to lie. This sin appeareth in childhood, and then such a habit is contracted, as they hardly are delivered from. It's now true of many, They go astray as soon as they are born, speaking lies. You lye to your parents, to excuse your faults: You lye to God, in breaking your baptismal vow. You lye to your equals, for pleasure, or gain: You speak falsely, to revenge your selves on such as you are angry with. Oh how oft do you speak otherwise than you think, and contrary to what you know, deceiving them to whom you speak!

Consider, thou child, lay to heart, O young man; that lying is a horrid sin. John viii. Herein thou imitatest the devil, who is the father of a lye, and the first lye. Thou art Prov. xii. contrary to God, who is a God of truth; to him lying lips are an abomination: He is so incensed by this sin, that he allots Rev. xxii. every lye his portion among the worst of sinners. Oh child! wouldst thou get to heaven? then thou must not lye. Art thou afraid of burning in hell for ever? then fear a lye. Wouldst thou be a child of God? he tells thee, his children are such as will not lye. It's the charge of Eph. iv. God to thee; Put away lying, and speak truth. Darest thou say, "I will not re"gard what the Lord faith to me!"
Alas! he will punish thee for a lye, worse than thy father or master can punish thee for any fault.

Young men, allow not your selves in this iniquity. Let no master force you to lye in your trade; much less do you use it in your discourse: It's a mean thing, it's destructive to human society, and the bane of conversation. What is a greater reproach, than to be a lyar? What is esteemed a worse affront, than to say thou lyest? Great are the mischiefs to men's repute, estates, peace, by a false tongue; and in vain are all pretences to religion, if the Jem. i. tongue be not bridled as to this fault. How hateful is it to debase so noble a thing as speech, in deluding thy brother in thy communication with him!

Quest. How shall a young man be preserved from llying?

Answ. (i.) Love truth, and despise what would allure thee to quit it in thy speech. It's the character of him that shall inhabit God's temple, He speaketh the Psal. xv. 2. truth in his heart. To speak the truth argues a plain man, an honest man, an heroic man, and generally a godly man. Therefore, like it in thy self, as thou must do in another. In order to this, get rid of slavish fear, which induceth to lying excuses: Hate pride and vain glory, whence all lyes for ostentation proceed; trample trample on love of filthy lucre, and thou wilt not lye for gain; abhor a hurtful envious spirit, which will prevent those lyes that are framed to the damage of thy neighbour.

(2.) Be wary, and thoughtful of what thou art about to speak. He that speaks hastily, is in danger to speak falsely; and having uttered one lye in haste, is too apt to back it with more: Whereas he that is sparing in his words, doth not easily betray truth; and he that considers, dares hardly utter a false thing. Who will venture to lye, that says within himself, "God hears what I am going to say, and he will judge me by my words?" This restraint on thy speech is so needful, that thou shouldst pray, Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips!

(3.) Let the lyes thou hast uttered at any time, be matter of deep humiliation. Repenting sorrow for what's past, will be a strong caution against the same fault. Thy grief for it will make thee earnestly pray with David, (whose fault this was,) Remove from me the way of lying! They nightly confess a lye, who can persist in the practice of it.

(4.) Take heed of equivocation, which is ordinarily downright lying. What is blamed in Jesuits, is too usual among Protestants: As if a poor artifice would compensate for truth. To conceal thy meaning meaning where thou dost not owe a discovery of it, is warrantable; but to impose delusion under pretence of truth, is intolerable, especially where rules of justice are violated. How sad is it to observe the liberty some take in deceiving their friends with ambiguous words, which they hope will be interpreted contrary to what they know to be true?

(5.) Do not be encouraged by reports, to publish what thou hast not just reason to believe. What false slanderers do some utter on incredible evidence? Report, say Jer. xx: they, and we will report it; as not daring to invent the lye, yet not scrupling to repeat what they more than suspect to be false. But learn thou, never to say any thing of thy enemy, upon worse testimony than thou wouldst believe it of thy friend.

(6.) You that are subject to correction, be watchful and innocent in your carriage, that you may not need to lye. Do nothing that thou needest be afraid to own. This will prevent falsehood; and thy fear of being put to lye, may guard thee against many irregularities.

Here I would advise parents and masters to encourage truth, by abating somewhat of severities for faults, that are plainly confessed. And I wish, buyers by their backwardness to give a just price, would not tempt the sellers to lye, in bargaining for their goods.

Q VIII. Young
The Vanity of

VIII. Young people are subject to fleshly lusts, especially uncleanness. This head concerns persons past childhood, and therefore I direct it to young men. You are not ignorant, that your appetites are unruly, and your inclinations too lascivious. In eating, you are prone to gluttony: Excessive drinking is too common a fault; there be many drunkards short of twenty years old: And voluptuousness seems the Idol, whom our striplings worship above the living God.

Uncleanness is thy raging disease. What immodest dalliance, what filthy thoughts, what obscene speeches, what wanton looks, self-pollution, yea, actual fornication, doth conscience charge some of you with? How few possess their vessels in honour, or arrive at manhood without a forfeiture of chastity?

Thou that art apt to drunkenness, or gluttony, oughtest to consider, what these vices are; and how vile thou renderest thy self, by indulging thy self therein. Sure thou forgettest thou art an embodied soul, while thou art led by thy brutish lusts. The name of Christian ill becomes thee, whose God is thy belly. Where is thy reason, that thy appetite should thus rule thee? What is thy conscience, that fails to terrify thee out of sins, so undoubted, and dangerous? Shall God put thee off with a portion that becomes a beast; and when thou thou askest heaven, reproach thee with faring sumptuously every day, and receiving thy good things in this life?

Oh drunkard! how odious art thou to all that behold thee? How subject to do and suffer the worst of mischiefs? Thy enemies have an advantage to betray thee; Satan may easily persuade thee to the greatest of sins, when thy soul is in no case to see the temptation, or the consequences of it. What secret art thou able to keep? What business art thou fit to do: How do reproach and penury wait thy persisting in this course? But above all, dost thou lay to heart, that God is incensed against thee? He left it a rule to Israel, that the young man should be stoned, against whom his parents witnessed, that he was a glutton and a drunkard: And 'tis the sanction under the gospel, that Drunkards shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Is 10.

Oh unclean person! how dismal is thy case? This lust blindeth thy judgment, and seareth thy conscience, so that misery becomes unavoidable by stupidness in sin. How darest thou worship a holy God, while thou wallowest in thy pollution? Doth not thy filthiness make God a terror to thee in every duty, as well as defile the duty by the wanderings of a vile imagination? The holy Spirit is quenched by lustful

1 Cor. vi. lustful motions, and cannot dwell in a heart so unclean. Thou protestest to belong to Christ's body; hear the Apostle's expostulation, Shall I take the members of Christ, and make them the members of a harlot? God forbid! How oft, O young man, hath the Spirit of God reproved thee? How oft hath conscience bitterly warned thee? And darest thou waste thy body, debauch thy mind, ruin thy estate, deface all hopeful impressions on thy soul, and renounce Christ, for a base lust? Wilt thou defy God to avenge thy affronts, and for ever undo thyself, and them whom thou allurest to partake in thy lasciviousness? If not, admit that as a holy resolve, Let us walk honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness; but put ye on the Lord Jesus. Take heed, lest God give thee up to vile affections.

1 Quest. How shall a young person be delivered from gluttony and drunkenness?

Answ. (1.) Set thyself to get the mastery of thy appetite. Reason with thy soul, and cry earnestly to God, that this may not be thy ruler: None would be a glutton or drunkard, but that his appetite hath more power than his reason; and conscience is too weak to resist the cravings of his lust. Most young people are pleased, that the beast should rule the man; they quietly yield up themselves to the

Rom. xiii. 13, 14.
Rom. i. 26.
the empire of this brutal part; they can bear no check to it, they are afraid it should come under restraints. But, Oh young man! thou art carnal or spiritual, as thy appetite or sanctified reason governs thee: Much of a christian's warfare consists in the struggle between these; the inordinate appetite is a great part of that flesh, which lusteth against the spirit, and is contrary to it. Is it not high time, thou shouldest set thyself to contend with this enemy, and attempt to bring it into subjection? This is temperance, when thou canst restrain its irregular motions, and deny its cravings. Oh then, daily quench this fire; and press after that sobriety, which implies a moderation of soul to the objects of sense, and a government of our life by the will of God, and not by fleshly desires. Let it then be thy business in every duty to weaken this tyrant, and the scope of thy life to deliver thyself from the power of thy appetite.

(2.) Make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil its lusts. It's afflictive to behold some persons contriving for their bellies, as if careful for nothing else. The design of their labours, and the thing that makes riches valuable with them, is, that they may pamper the flesh, and fulfil its desires. But resolve with thyself, thou wilt not minister to this flame, nor live as if catering for the flesh were thy principal employment.
ment in this world. Prepare what is meet for thy body; it's a mercy in our pilgrimage to have the conveniencies of life; but excesses are fittest for them who dare brutishly say, Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we die. Poor worms! is there nothing after death, that they should live in preparation for? yea, is not life it self as bad as death, while it serves to no higher an end? Nay, these voluptuous courses do often so enfeeble nature, and multiply diseases, that life is a burthen, and some beginning of hell in bodily torments.

(3.) Avoid temptations, according to thy weakness to resist them. He that is prone to slip, ought the more carefully to look to his ways. Is gluttony thy crime? be afraid of feasts. Art thou apt to be drunk? look not at the wine when it sparkles. Refrain the company, in compliance with whom thou hast so oft offended. Knowest thou not, that the companion of riotous persons shameth his father? It's in vain to pretend, "I will not be drunk, though I do associate with them that will persuade me to it." How oft hast thou resolved, and yet complied? nay, thy delight in the sin is plain, in the choice of such associates; and thy lust is strong enough to prevail when the temptation offers, if it be able thus before-hand to lead thee into the occasion.

(4.) Force thy self to an abstinence from from just liberty for some time, when the strength of thy lust is found to abuse what is otherwise lawful. Some people are so exorbitant, that if they drink any wine, they must drink to excess; if they go into a tavern at all, they cannot forbear drunkenness: If that be thy case, do not despise it as below virtue, for a while to drink no wine at all, or wholly to forbear a tavern or alehouse. It is thy misery, that what is to another man lawful, is to thee a snare; but it is thy duty and wisdom, to manage thy self with a regard to thy weakness, that thou mayest by degrees get rid of thy wickedness.

(5.) Be intent by watchfulness and hard struggles to oppose thy lusts, till time and frequent repulses abate their power. An appetite long indulged, is not soon brought under the power of the soul. It will be importunate and uneasy, even after its dominion is removed; much more, while the contest for superiority between it and grace is undecided. Therefore sink not, as if it were in vain to strive; nor let the uneasiness of the struggle, tempt thee to give it over. For as yielding to the flesh makes it more impetuous, so frequent denying it will abate the strength of its motions. Many drunkards, after a while, become rid of all inclinations to be drunk; and sobriety grows so habitual to them, as if excess had never been their temper.
temper. Oh children! never make your cure hard, by beginning a wicked custom: Oh young men that are ensnared! grieve not to be at due pains, nor patiently to wait the stopping of the course of sin, which you have strengthened by frequent compliances. Thou must cease to be a drunkard, or thou art miserable for ever. And thou must be at all the labour here advised, and be willing to continue it till thou art reformed, or a drunkard thou wilt be still.

2 Quest. How shall a young man be delivered from uncleanness?

Ans. The former directions are proper to this case: I shall apply somewhat of them, and add some more rules.

(1.) Awe thy soul with the purity and perfection of God's law, as it refers to this sin. It's a great snare, to mistake a precept, and confine it below God's explication of it, or intention in it. Yet how many young people allow themselves in degrees of uncleanness, as innocent; not seeing, that these things are comprehended in that precept, Thou shalt not commit adultery? Therefore young man! examine the word more strictly, and thou wilt find, that God hath provided against every degree of uncleanness, and against all that leads thereto. Are thy hidden thoughts and motions free? No; the thought of foolishness is sin: Our Lord reproves the Pharisees Pharisees as hypocrites, because their hearts were full of uncleanness; and evil concupiscence, inordinate affections, &c. are to be mortified. Are thy luftful gazings on a woman allowed? No; our Saviour expressly faith, He that looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. Mayest thou talk obscenely? No; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, are convenient, nor to be once named among Christians. If the command of God reach to these lesser degrees, sure thou art not so stupid, as not to see that all groser acts are forbidden, as more abominable. And if marriage be the remedy against incontinence, thou darest not think that God allows thee other ways to gratify thy luft, and so frustrate the great ends of that ordinance, and the aptitude of human nature for it.

(2.) Be watchful against all occasions of uncleanness. Nourish not luft by an intemperate diet. He had need be free from fleshly inclinations, who dares strengthen the assaults of the flesh against his chastity. The Spirit of God tells thee, that if wine prevail, thine eyes shall behold strange women. Be not in the reach of a woman that will entice thee. Joseph escaped the snare by flying from his mistress, and refusing to be with her: Whereas the young man that admitted the speeches of the immodest woman, was soon insnared. Ven... ture not on thy own strength too far: God may justly leave thee, when thou temptest him; and stronger than thou art, have sadly rued the power of occasions. Play-houses, mixt dancings, &c. have been the ruin of many youth.

(3.) Guard thy senses. These are inlets of evil; by them objects insnare, and kindle those lusts which lay asleep. David's eye betrayed him into adultery. Job is to thee a good example, who says, I have made a covenant with mine eyes. Listen not to immodest songs, or leud discourse; which insensibly stir up those inclinations, which tend to the vilest acts.

(4.) Stifle the first workings of lust. First motions are weakest, and so more easily conquer'd; the longer they are entertained, the more violent they grow, and the soul less apt to oppose them. Filthy contemplations allowed, darken the mind, and abate that dread and abhorrence which are a great part of thy security against sin. Oh then crush the first appearance! If thou ask me, how? I'll tell thee: Banish these evil thoughts out of thy mind: Plead God's command, and seek his help: Represent to thy self the threats and punishments of God against this sin: Consider, that these motions unrestrained, may end in the grossest action; and resolve, not to speak a word, to glance one look, or use one one gesture, in compliance with that sinful motion.

(5.) Avoid idleness, as that which tempts the devil to tempt thee. Young man! it's a great mercy to the world, that we have business to follow; and he that hath no employment, will wish hereafter he had never had an estate to prevent a calling; therefore, be sure thou hast work to do, and attend it. Sin easily entangleth the idlers, who will be doing wickedly for want of business: But the diligent is not at leisure for vain thoughts, he needs not insinuating company to divert him. Labour substracts matter from lusts, and renders the body less disturbing to the soul. Leisure hours are the young man's danger. Be not desirous of too many such, and double thy watch in the spending of them: For Satan observes thee then, and will suggest vain thoughts to thy mind, excite fleshly motions, and prepare insinuating opportunities.

(6.) Attentively regard, and yield up thy self to the motions of the holy Spirit. The Spirit will warn thee against these defilements, and direct thee to that purity of heart and life, that will prevent the advantages the unclean spirit finds in thy youthful age. A reverential regard to the presence of the Spirit, will call thy mind from base employs, and excite thee to what is approved by him: And the more his fruits abound, and express themselves in thy temper and carriage, the more effectually wilt thou be cleansed from all thy fleshly pollutions. To this we are directed in that exhortation, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh. Yea, the aids and influence of this holy one are necessary to a saving abstinence from, and dominion over lusts;

Gal. v. 16.

Rom viii. as you see from that of the Apostle, But if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

(7.) Keep thy thoughts well employ'd. This will prevent those vain imaginations, which are the incentives of lust; and by which the judgment is blinded, or bribed to persuade the will. Let the word of Christ dwell richly in thee, by filling thy mind. Contemplate God in his perfections; behold him present with thee, when in the greatest secrecy. He makes a third, when thou and thy paramour are most retired. In this case he testifies, Even I know, and I am witness, saith the Lord. Represent to thy soul the torments following these lusts, if gratified. Hell-fire is enough to quench these lustful flames; and who dare wish the pleasure so dearly bought?

Jer. xxix. 23.

Heb. xiii. Attend to such scriptures, as, Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge, &c. Oh young man! canst thou think of this believingly, and cast off restraints, or give a carnal mind its scope?

(8.) Resolve
(8.) Resolve before thou compliest with the most urgent temptation, to put up a serious prayer to God in Christ. Lay thyself under this law, "I will not consent, before I look to God." It must be a dreadful evil, that will not admit an address to Christ. If it be a sin, I have need of strength from him, who came on this errand, to put away sin, to cleanse from iniquity, and destroy the works of the devil. (Heb. ix. 26. Eph. v. 26. 1 John iii. 8.) Prayer may deaden the temptation when strongest: It may recover thy baffled power; for Christ is able to inspire thee with that light and vigour, as may support thee when thou art almost gone. St. Paul prayed thrice, when grieved with a thorn in the flesh, and the grace of Christ proved sufficient for him. The devil, the flesh, and an enticing object, are too hard for any man, that calls not in the help of Christ by prayer. Satan desires no more, than to engage thee single: And without frequent supplications, thou art like to be so. On the other hand, prayer will drive Satan to some more subtle assault, than so gross a wickedness as uncleanness must appear to every one, that beholdeth Christ when calling on him. Therefore, I do again intreat thee, even when thy lusts seem to have most advantage, that thou wilt not forget to present thy case to him, who is concerned for thy good, and able to foil the enemies of thy soul, when in the greatest prospect of success.

Thus have I represented to young people some of the sins, to which your age is most subject. All are not named: Alas! there's Swearing, which is a prophane villany, that hath neither pleasure nor profit to allure. There's Theft, which is a violation of justice, and a discontent with what God hath thought fit to give you. There's Pride, (one instance whereof I shall hereafter speak to,) which among you children and youth is generally upon very fordist accounts: You are proud of a little beauty, which the small-pox may spoil, and nobody is truly the better for: You are proud of your fine clothes, and from pride desire them; but what trifles are these? none but fools esteem them, or value thee the more for them.

Though I cannot insist on these, yet if God is pleased to deliver thee from such sins as I have mentioned, all others will be reformed. Oh then set thy self against them. Let the youngest be warned against these, as what they will feel temptations to: And be all resolved, faithfully to observe the directions given; that if possible, you may arrive to middle age, free from the corruptions of childhood and youth, and not be forced to cry out with bitter reflections, Thou makest me to possess the the iniquities of my youth. What would Job xiii., 26. an aged saint give, that he had been innocent of all these crimes while he was young? Learn wisdom by such now, while thou hast opportunity and warnings.

I now proceed to the second head of the vanity of childhood and youth, viz.

Secondly, Children and young people are apt to live to no valuable purpose, which is vanity.

Thou wilt easily allow, that to spend ones strength and time for nothing, or what is as good as nothing, is vain. Is not he a vain body, that thinks much, talks much, and doth much, to no purpose? Common opinion will grant this. We brand Caius Caligula as vain, for bringing a great army to the sea-shore, and gathering cockle-shells, when he pretended a great attempt. The Spirit of God justly accuseth these persons; Behold, they are all vanity, their works are nothing. Solomon doth frequently mean this in his book of Ecclesiastes, when he faith, This also is vanity; that is, its to no valuable purpose; it is not worth the labour and concern a man is at: One had as good let it alone, and be unemployed, as reap no other fruit.

Young people! this is your very Cafe: Most of you live, and busy your selves for nought.
1. You are apt to design nothing at all in your living. It's long before thou askest thy self, "What do I live for? what " end shall I pursue?" Are not most of thy actions performed, thou knowest not why? Most of you are hurried by a foolish temper, allowing no deliberate design to govern you. A vain mind, or devilish suggestions determine the actions of most young people. Is not this a reproach to thee, If thou happen to do any good, it's more by chance than by thy choice? If thou receivest any real advantage, it's by a merciful providence, and not by thy intention. If God should ask thee at the church door, Wherefore comest thou hither? May not some of you say, "I do not know: It was from a fancy I had " to hear, or from custom." But how few can say, "I had a design to get some " help to grapple with my youthful lusts; " I proposed to meet with God in his word " for my soul's improvement." When you intend so little in an ordinance, what purposes must govern you in the ordinary affairs of life?

2. Your youth is spent to no considerable purpose. May not I tell most here, Thy time past is lost, and the time to come is like to be lost? For, years thou hast lived, O child of ten years old? What hast thou improved by the fifteen years thou hast lived, O youth of fifteen years old? Yea, may not I as justly ask the young man of twenty, What hast thou done? what use hast thou made of thy twenty years? Must not conscience answer, "Oh! I had as good been just "now born, for any good I have got- "ten!" That I may fasten this conviction, I call every soul to answer me; What art thou nearer God to this day? How much is sin mortified? What grace hast thou attained to this very time? Oh youth! hast thou yet got an interest in Christ? What treasure hast thou laid up in heaven? If thou must own, "I am "further from God, and not nearer; "sin is stronger, and not weakened;" then sure thou wilt own, thou hast lived in vain to thy self. But farther,

(1.) Thou hast lived in vain, as to thy self. What hast thou gotten by the ten years
Childhood and Youth.

(2.) How many others may lay to thee the charge of unprofitableness? Thou livest in vain, as to God. He may say, "This "young man never served nor praised "me; I had as good there had not been "such a youth in the world." Thou livest in vain, to thy friends: Thy pa-rent may say, "It is an unprofitable child "to me; I have yet had no comfort by "him." Thy relations may cry, "He "never gave us good counsel or ex- "ample." Thou livest in vain, to thy master:
The Vanity of

He hath got little advantage by thy care, or labour. Thy minister may cry, "This young body brings me little " joy as yet; I have striven to little pur- " pose with him; he seems as if I had " laboured wholly in vain." Thou hast lived in vain, to the church: What increase, or glory, hath it reaped by thee? Thou hast lived in vain, to the nation: Thou hast not helped to make it, more innocent by thy life, more flourishing by thy industry, or more safe by thy prayers. So that now, young man! is it not a true charge, which I lay to thee? and mayest thou not cry out, "Oh useless I! " I have lived for nought; I have been an useless shadow; I have cumbered the " ground, and God may justly cut me " off as an unfruitful one?"

Obj. I foresee some young one will be ready to evade this charge, and say, " I do live to some purpose that is valu- " able: I gratify my senses, I live plea- " santly, I begin to mind and look after " the world, &c."

Answ. Alas, poor creature; is living to the flesh valuable? is living barely to this world valuable? is living to the devil valuable? Methinks thy reason should tell thee, it's better not to live at all, than to live to these. An intelligent spirit to live to the flesh, is base: An immortal soul to live live barely to this world, is madness: A creature of God, redeemed by the Lord Jesus, to live to the devil, is self-destructive, and foolish. What! live to him, who hath undone thee in the Fall, and is so studious to prevent thy recovery by Christ! live to him, who hath blinded, blemished, and debased thee, as he hath done! live to him, who though he hates thy God, cannot escape his own misery! live to him, who envieth thy good, desires thy woe, opposes all that is the benefit of mankind, and contributes to all the miseries and disorders which the world is distressed by! Oh young man! canst thou justify this course of living?

But this will more appear, if upon a due reflection on thy life, thou wilt answer me these questions.

[1.] Doth thy life answer God's end and purpose in giving thee a being?

The wisdom of God may assure thee, he had an end becoming himself in thy creation. He tells thee, All things were created by him, and for him. The blessed God had an eye to himself, and a regard to Christ the Redeemer, in giving thee an existence. He exerted his power in thy being, that thou mightest serve and ho-

Butt thou answer this end, by living as thou dost? hast thou ever aimed at this? doth thy behaviour contribute to this at all? Thy way of life would be a reproach to thy maker, to have proposed it to himself in thy creation.

[2.] Are there not greater purposes, to which thy nature and abilities are suited?

He lives to no valuable purpose, that neglects to live to the highest purposes he is capable of. Little things are a reproach to him, that is adapted to great things. Have not you faculties to know and love your God? and do your childish or wicked employments answer them? You are capable to serve, and glorify the blessed God; and is the gratifying thy lusts equal to these? You are receptive of divine joys; and are thy carnal merriments answerable to these? Oh young body? what use art thou fit for to others? what benefit dost thou yield to thy self? How canst thou seem to answer these, by a trifling diversion, or a perishing advantage? Sure, thy capacity is thy shame: The very beast, that liveth to the utmost of his power, will witness against thee, who behavest thy self so much below thine. It would have been thy mercy, whose exercises have been so low, that thy abilities had been less. Hence,

[3.] Wilt thou not shortly acknowledge with shame and grief, that thou hast lived to unvaluable purposes?

No minister's rebuke will be so sharp as thy Childhood and Youth.

thy own, when grace renews thee, or endless torments overtake thee. If the Spirit ever enlighten thy mind, and alter thy will, we may ask thee, What fruit had you of those things, whereof you are now ashamed? With a grieving blush thou wilt answer, "Nothing I dare boast of, no-"thing I can justify. I am ashamed of "my reward, as well as my labour. What "I reaped by my sin is my shame, as well "as sin itself. It was a fool's diversion, "wherewith I pleased my self; it was my "blemish, wherein I glorièd; it was my "loss, whereby I valued my self. What "are they now to me? They are dog's bea-"meat [κανέαν] to what I now taste. I "am astonished, that I could relish those "unfavoury things, or derive the least con-"tentment from them, when my chief "good was unsecure." Young man! if grace do not awaken thee, Hell will. This and the never-dying worm will be convic-"tions, of the emptines of what thou haft pursued, and of the base purposes thou haft lived to. How will they tear thy soul with such thoughts as these? "Where's "the pleasure now? Where's the sa-"tisfaction, to which my endeavours "were confined? Oh that I had been "but a beast, who have lived to desig-"ns so brutish! Oh that I had no intellec"tual nature, since I studied not to know "my God, and the way of Life! Oh that I had been void of rational powers, since I did not govern my self accordingly! Oh that ever I had natural abilities to love and fear, since I have not loved my God, nor so revered him, as to abstain from vanity! Woe is me, that I had a capacity for any service, seeing I have lived so uselessly to God, to my friends, and to my self! Alas, where is the fruit of my labour! What now do

I enjoy, that deserved one hour of my life, or answers the least of my abilities!" These, these, oh child! will be the effects of thy present way.

Thirdly, Children and young people are apt to live to destructive purposes, which is the height of vanity.

The last head is convincing, that it were as well thou hadst never lived; but by this it were far better for thee, thou hadst remained mere nothing to this day. To live to hurtful ends, is worse than not living at all. Yet this is your condition; you dishonour God, you provoke the eyes of his glory, you trample the blood of Christ under your feet with contempt.
How many young people serve the devil with their strength, and are a snare and infection to all they can influence? One young body spoils many others, and leads them to that villany they had never thought of.

You
Childhood and Youth.

You oft break your parents hearts; and they by thy means feel, that a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.

You frequently destroy your master's estate. To the serious, you are a grief; to the city and kingdom a plague; as helping on its sin, hastening its punishment, and obstructing its good. How many may complain of harm on thy account?

But whatever hurt you bring to others, sure you avoid mischiefs to your selves? No, no: Young men live most to their own hurt, and seem to take great pains to make their misery sure and great. Oh, vain youth! thou daily makest thy self more the child of wrath by thy sinful practices; thy wicked habits grow more strong. By idleness and frequent opposition, hopeful principles are more baffled and expelled. Conscience by thy affronts, is less concerned, and capable to admonish thee. Thy ill treatment of God's Spirit makes him withdraw, and his visits are more seldom; so that he is ready to say of thee, Let him alone. Hof. iv. 17.

Believe it, careless youth! thy ways tend to more sin, and less hopefulness of grace and glory. Oh, wretched life! to live only to be more guilty, and to be exposed to greater punishments. Thou runnest hell-ward; thy thoughts tend there, thy words lead there, thy vile actions heap the the greater store of eternal flames. Indigination and wrath, tribulation and anguish, are the things thou workest for: Thou labourest for these wages; thou deliverest thy self daily to a greater obnoxiousness to these woes; as if thou wert afraid thou shouldst not be miserable enough.

Oh soul to be pitied! Not to be born had been thy mercy, as well as Judas's, unless thou change thy living. Is it not to thee those words are proper, Behold you are worse than nothing, Eld.? Hadst thou not lived at all, thou hadst not done the mischief thou art now doing, thou couldst not have felt the hurt thou must shortly endure. How may most young folk bemoan the day of their birth! their life is a misery, which might have capacitated them for the bliss of angels, had they well employed it. The Lord grant, you be not found thus foolish, and cruel to your selves! But to this you are more prone, than to a more profitable course.

My next work is to shew you, 1. How chdhood and youth became thus vain?

1 Quest. How comes it to pass, that chdhood and youth are vain?

Answ. Childhood and youth became vain by original sin. There's the spring spring of the disease: Thou didst not come out of God’s hand thus prone to sin, and thus averse to himself; but a depraved nature descends to thee from Adam, by the line of thy ancestors. Thou wast born under the infection common to mankind, generated in the ordinary manner; the very quickened Embryo in the womb hath all the seeds of those sins, which time ripens, and opportunity brings forth. Our constitution is become sinful, and all corrupt effects are next to natural.

I shall not trouble you with disputes, but merely inform you, (1.) How our nature became corrupt: And (2.) How it descends thus corrupted to thee.

(1.) Our nature became corrupt, or vain, by the entrance of sin; whereby the divine image was expelled, as well as forfeited.

A rational soul cannot be void of moral qualities and dispositions, as it is a subject of God’s moral government. There must be wisdom, or sinful ignorance, in the mind: There must be love or enmity to what is good, and aversion or inclination to what is evil, in the will. For man is not considered in God’s law, merely as an agent with respect to what he occasionally acteth; but he is considered also as to his temper, what he is; what are his governing principles, and prevailing dispositions. These are necessary to the denominating him a godly or ungodly man, as well well as influential into the ordinary course of his actings, which will be answerable to his inclinations and light.

Adam was created after God's image, which consisted in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness. Gen. i. 27. Eph. iv. 24. Col. iii. 10. This was his constitution; tho' not so fixed, as to prevent the possibility of finning. And while Adam sinned not, our nature was impressed with that holy power, light, and love, which answered the law, and capacitated us for that exact obedience enjoined by it. These divine qualities are inconsistent with their contraries, by the law of innocence; tho' they are not incompatible, by the law of grace. For that law insisted on perfection, and entire innocence; and fixed a forfeiture of all holy gifts, by man considered in any degree sinful. Yea, besides this forfeiture of these gifts by the penal sanction of the law, man was not entitled to those aids of the Spirit, whereby divine qualities might subsist in the same soul with contrary sinful dispositions, as they do under the law of grace. No such influences of the Spirit were provided in the law of creation. And therefore, as the least sin in the soul brought down our holiness below perfect, and thereby made it cease to be holiness by the rule of innocence; (for love was not love by that law, if there was any mixture of enmity against God;) so Sin would prevail vail to extinguish that Purity, and expell those holy dispositions at first implanted, if once it entered into the soul.

Adam did subsift a while happy under this law: But at last he sinned. His heart turned from God to the creature; which implies ignorance in the mind, and aversation and enmity to God in the will. The entrance of these did of course deprave the soul of Adam; knowledge was expelled by darkness, corruption removed his original purity. The disease invaded the whole man, the poison operated to the extinction of his glorious excellencies. There was no need for God to take any good out of the human nature; it necessarily died by the force of sin: And it is by a new grant, that there be any remains of good in lapsed man. It is not from any thing in man, or in the first covenant, that there be any moral virtues, or good nature in any: God in mercy bestows these, and restrains the growing contagion of sin, that we become not more devilish.

When holy light and love were expelled by sin, the appetite (of course) became master of our reason, and all disorders hence ensue. The soul being clothed with flesh, doth for want of holy principles become subject to sensible inclinations, which thro' the presence of agreeable objects, hurry poor man into all that is flesh-pleasing; while the proper concerns of the soul are forgotten, forgotten, and its intercourse with unseen things is cut off, for want of that light which should perceive them, and that holy love which might relish and desire them. A soul thus debased and entangled, becomes little better than an active power to contrive fuel for our various lusts, and receive the little delights which are ministered by sense and fancy. Oh wretched state! especially when error, and enmity against God and holiness, help to compleat its depravedness.

(2.) Thy nature descended thus corrupted to thee, as propagated by the appointed law of natural generation.

Adam was not only the common head of mankind, as representing all mere men, but also he was the original of all men in order to propagation. As representative, he was capable to forfeit much good. As he was the common parent, he must transmit the nature which he had with its impurities. He was to propagate his kind, and begat Seth in his own likeness; which is opposed to the likeness of God, wherein Adam was made: Though Seth was the father of the holier part of the world, and a good man; yet he was not begotten after God's likeness, or with a nature in its original purity, but with a nature as depraved in fallen Adam. Lapsed corrupted nature cannot propagate a holy nature: For who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Or,
Or, how can he be clean, that is born of a woman? A person naturally sinful, cannot generate a child free from that sinfulness: If the father be naturally void of spiritual wisdom, the son in the course of nature will be so. And if we are born void of wisdom and holiness, we must be vain, foolish, and ungodly; for human nature must be unholy, if it be not holy. This made David own, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me. This is so fixed a rule, that our blessed Lord must have an extraordinary generation, to escape the pollution of human nature: Mary was found with child of the Holy Ghost; the Spirit overshadowed her; and this Christ is the only one born holy. Others are made holy by grace: Some, it may be, are renewed in the womb; but none are naturally so, or by ordinary generation. Therefore if thou shouldst ask, Why do not good men naturally beget good Children? I answer, Their goodness is superadded to their nature, it comes by another law than that of nature; their grace is from Christ, for the salvation of their own persons, but not to propagate to their offspring by generation.

Oh young man! thou feest, how thou groanest under Adam's fall, and labourest under the depravedness of human nature, as propagated from Adam by thy ancestors down to thee! And is there ever a child here, here, but is a living witness to this corruption? Are you not all proner to sin, than holiness? Is it not easier to make you vile, than to make you gracious? Do not fewer and weaker arguments incline you to be wicked, than to be godly? Is there not that in thee, which serves instead of a tempter to evil, tho' there were no ill example or solicitation from without? Wert thou ever sensible of this, oh child? Hast thou been yet truly humbled for original sin? Thou wast wicked while an infant, as to the temper of thy soul; the corrupt nature thou then hadst, is the spring of all thy vanity. Thy nature is, to be foolish, to lye, to be unclean, and what else is vile. That nature, while unrenewed, will express its unholiness and enmity against God, one way or another. It's true, the power of one contrary lust may bridle or destroy another: Thy bodily constitution, God's restraints, education, &c. may prevent the raging of some lusts; but the malignity continueth, and cannot fail to govern, till the grace of Christ do alter thee.
The Vanity of

2 Quest. Why do childhood and youth continue vain?

Answ. Childhood and youth continue vain, for want of a due use of the means appointed for their healing. O young people, here are three things in this, that are very fit to move you.

(i.) Here's
(1.) Here's comfort, that the vanity of youth is healable. Thy case is sad, but 'tis not desperate. There's hope in Israel, concerning the recovery of sinners in their youth. The devils became wicked, and never can be recovered; they may grow viler, but they can never grow better: But blessed be God, this is not thy case. Thy wound, though sad, is yet curable. There have been many young folk made pious and serious. Isaac was good betimes; Timothy and John were old disciples, before they could call man; Josiah's tender years were impressed with grace. I have known undoubted evidence of grace before ten years old. Oh then you need not resolve to be vile, because 'tis in vain to attempt to be good. No, no. No young persons in this assembly need to say so, or need to think so. God has not resolved against young persons, that they shall never be recovered; nay, he has determined, that out of the mouth of babes and sucklings he will perfect praise. Children! our Lord Jesus has never said, I will have nothing to do with such as you; I'll neither wash you, nor heal you, nor teach you: Nay, he has said quite otherwise, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, &c. The Spirit of God never resolved, I will convince no wicked children, I will sanctify no profane youth: Nay, instead of that, to you he says, Come, ye children, Psal. bearken xxxiv. 11.
hearken unto me, and I will teach you the fear of the Lord. The Spirit has a mind to be the teacher of children, and the instructor of youth; he has a mind to train up the young generation for heaven, as well as the old ones. So that young ones may say to day, "Why, though I am wicked, yet there's hope; and though I have a vile nature, yet there's hope. I may be recovered, even though my whole frame seems thus set for villany, and appears thus desperately disposed."

There is the first point, and that's a great matter; and under the power of that, I preach to young ones; under the hopes, that you young ones will regard what I say, and urge; for the case of youth is invaluable.

(2.) Here's a loud call to you, that God uses means to heal young ones of their vanity. This confirms the former. Is God at pains with youth to make them better? then there is hope of youth; for God would not be at this labour, if it were wholly useless. O my friends! God has sent his Son to die for young children, as well as old men; even young ones receive forgiveness by his blood: My little children, your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake. The Spirit of God strives with many young ones, as soon as they can understand anything; he bids early for your compliance. I believe, there is not not a child of six years old under the gospel-means, but the Spirit of God has been striving with. This holy one can truly say, I have been dealing with this child to make it happy.

Pray let's a little consider: Thou child or youth! hast thou had no sense of hell's misery ever upon thy heart? Hast thou never been convinc'd, that 'twas ill to lye, or swear? Hast thou never found pressing motions to be good, and to resolve against evil? have no good desires stirred in thy soul? Why, all these were the workings of the Spirit of God on thy poor soul. God has been labouring with every young body in this congregation. He has been labouring with thee, by the advice of thy parents: When they taught thee to read, or taught thee thy catechism, or instructed thee to pray, it was God by them was taking pains with thee.

We Ministers preach to you young ones, as well as to the old. Nay, we preach to you with more hopes, expecting that you are not hardened as old persons are. Young people, consider! have not the mercies of God, have not his preserves of you, been so many teachers? What has been the language of every mercy to thee, child, to you, young ones, but this? "Oh children! don't you provoke this God; don't make me your enemy; for you see, I would fain do you good, S " I would
"I would fain be merciful, and not a destroyer of you." Nay, have not afflictions been the pains of God with you? Is there ever a young one here, that has not been sick at one time or other? why the Lord sent that sickness to thee, and spake in this manner thereby, "I will warn this young one to be religious, lest he should die before he be converted." All the corrections of thy parents, and master, for thy sin, have all been the calls of God; and his language in them all has been, "I would fain imbitter sin to this poor young one, by something short of hell: I would gladly restrain the wickedness of this youth, that I may not damn him."

You see, you had need look to it, for God has used means towards your recovery. Think not, "God doth not mean me in his word." Don't say, "God did not intend my cure in the helps I enjoy." But believe, he intendeth thee as well as any other. It's thy enlightning, O young man! that he intends by all his teaching. 'Tis thy conversion, O young woman! that he designs by all his calls. All these have been directed upon this very design; and left you should doubt it, the Spirit of God does particularly name you: Young men and maidens, praise ye the Lord; and Psal. cxlviii. 12. young men are exhorted to be sober minded. Nay, Christ himself tells us, in the beginning of the Proverbs, that his great design there, is, to give discretion to the simple young ones. Therefore I beg, that not one young body in this place may forget what I now say, That they frustrate God's hopes, if they be not good; and disappoint him of all his labour, if they be not gracious: All the pains that have been taken with them, are lost upon them. And will God bear this? What will become of you, if you proceed this way?

(3.) Here's an awful charge, that you young men continue vain, because you don't rightly use the means for your healing. Ah, sad charge! The case of young ones is curable, but why is it not altered before now? Why, O conscience speak! Children, you have consciences; young ones, you have consciences; can you say, "It is long of God I am vile still? 'tis long of the want of means, " that I am vile still?" Ah, friend! The Father, Son, and Spirit can all say, "It " is not my fault, that this child is bad " still; it is not my fault, that this young " man and woman is wicked so long; " it is not long of me." May not the Spirit of God say, "I have taken more " pains with this child, and spoken oftner " to this young person, than I have done " with thousands in the world." Alas! So it is concerning every one of you. Children of Pagans never had thy helps, in all their days. Consider a little with your selves, God may this day say, "I began early with this young one; I have still pleaded after many a repulse, I have followed him and her, from day to day, and from sin to sin: Oh how earnest have I been with this young stripling, that I could propose very little good by;
yet have I taken pains and labour with "him." Come, young people, Is it now to begin, that God has cry'd to you, Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will you die? Is it now the first time, that he has said unto you, Will you not be made clean? when shall it once be? Has Christ never said unto thee, Look unto me, and be saved! look unto me for help, for there's help no where else: Thy distress makes me needful, and pity makes me willing.

Lay these things to heart, and I will defy any young body in this place, to go away, and say; "I have lived up to "what I know, I have improved all that "God has afforded me, but he denied to "give me more: I am miserable and "wicked still, because God has refused "to help me, when I have fought it of "him." Is there any that can talk at this rate? No, not one.—Not one? Why then, whence is it that we have so many young people bad still? why still so fatal to thy self? why a slave to base lufts? O friend
friend! God knows the cause, and thou knowest the cause: Thou didst not use the knowledge thou hast; thou didst not improve thy opportunity. Doth not conscience witness, Thy ear has not been opened, thy heart has not been attentive, thou didst not frame thy doings to turn unto the Lord? God can say this day, "This poor creature might have been in a good case; he would have been serious before now, if he would but have yielded to my pleadings, if he would but have turned at my reproofs. This young body would have been an eminent Christian before now, had all my impressions been retained, and all my calls complied with: He had known me better, had he been but as teachable in my ways, as he was in other things: But he set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof."

Oh then, young people! consider with your selves, what has been your case: You have told God plainly, I will not come to thee, that I might have life. Where's the young body, that has not practically given God a denial? Every time thou waft under conviction of Sin, and didst not leave it, thou didst tell God; "Lord, I would be thine, but I love my sin better: I would be happy for ever, but I will not, unless I may be wicked in this world." The youngest here hath the great hand in his own ruin; he that is but of ten years old, if he perish, he is his own destroyer: (I think it's true of many younger.)

CHILDREN! You were born vain, and you have wilfully chosen to remain so. You may be ready to accuse Adam, by whom you became wicked; but it is your own fault that you continue wicked, since God hath provided a remedy. It's your sin, that you are no better for mercies, no better for afflictions, no better for means; wicked before, and wicked still.

Oh therefore! what will you be able to answer? How far is it! that any young body here should be forced to say, "Lord, 'tis my fault, that I am no better for a Christ; and no better for the gospel; my misery is of my own choosing; God has taken pains with me, but 'tis all lost through the obstinacy of my will."

These three things are plain under that second head, wherein you see, why young people remain vile and vain.

Answ. Youth becomes yet more vain by evil customs, and indulging carnal self. Vanity unhealed is of a growing nature; and there is no bad child, but grows still worse. Sin is not a stream that grows empty, or a root that dies by mere time: God
God knows, we have had experience of that. Alas, how doth villany grow with years! The child that began with few sins, grows up to many sins; in so much that we have some young men before eighteen, have committed as great sins as the man of eighty. Youth enters with lesser sins, and proceeds to greater sins. We have many young people that seem to abound in wickedness, as they advance in age; as if they grew older, only that they may grow viler. Oh, what a mercy would have it been for such, to have died in the womb! or any one year before another! Now, Sirs, whence is it? how can it be, that young people should grow thus vainer and vainer, instead of better and better?

I TELL you, One sin brings on another; and by the lesser, thou art fitted for a greater. Sinful habits are strengthened by sinful acts; and fear, and shame for sin wear off, yea, are even extinguished by a course of sin. O poor soul! Satan has got the faster hold; the Spirit has been provoked, and given over striving; and it may be, thy parents through despair, have almost given over praying. Conscience that warned thee, is fear'd and silenced, and so the wicked creature has his full scope. God says of him, "Let this poor creature alone, I'll strive with him no more." O young folks! you may be hardened before you grow old; lust may be strongly rooted before old age; and I fear 'tis so with abundance of youth. Is it not so with some of you? Did not some of you blush at a little sin, and now thou canst mock at great ones? Are there not some among you, that once dared not to tell a small lye, and now you can lye all sorts? Are there none here, that trembled when they swore a little oath, and now can swear at the bloodiest rate, and add blasphemy and cursing to their oaths? Sirs, did not some of you feel a check for a light act, and now you can commit fornication and uncleanness without any inward rebuke? It was hard to bring thee to pilfer a penny, and now thou canst steal shillings and pounds. It was with much ado, that thou couldst endure to be drunk in the night; but now thou canst do it openly, and glory in it. Thou durst not formerly have neglected a sermon, and thou must pray by thy self; but now, alas, poor creature! thou canst play away a whole sabbath; and spend weeks without prayer, without one serious prayer. My friends, what's the matter? Is sin grown a less evil? By no means. Is God, and heaven, and hell, less certain? No, no, firs, you will feel it to your cost. Is thy poor soul less precious, and less valuable? No, this is not it neither. But the reason of it is this, wickedness is grown by wickedness; committing sin fin has made it easy; the current of sin running, has made the channel wider, and the opposition less. Oh, therefore, for the Lord's sake, begin this day to consider, the devil is grown more impetuous by thy consent: And I can tell thee to day, and let the youngest of you observe it, If thou continuest wicked, thou wilt be yet more and more so; and thou wouldst now blush to think what wickedness thou wilt hereafter come to: As Hazael, when it was foretold him by the Prophet what cruelties he should commit, cries out, Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing?

Thus I have finished what I intended in the explication; and now,

I come to the USE.

First, By the way of Inference: May the Lord set it home! Some owned great good on this day twelve-month; may more receive good to day! The inferences then are these.

Inf. I. How dismal a sight doth this truth afford us of the world? Childhood and youth are vanity. Ah, Lord! How true then is it, that even the whole world lies in wickedness? The greater part doth so; for young people are many more than old ones. The chief part of age is vanity; the best part of time is vanity: Childhood is the time fittest to learn in; youth is the time... time fittest to act in; and yet both these are vanity. Oh, how little are heavenly designs carried on by young ones? Oh, how little is God worshipp’d and served by young ones? how few of them are engag’d in their own true concerns? Dreadful! that in youth we will do nothing, and in age we can do nothing! Oh, who loves God, and is not grieved? who loves souls, and is not melted? All come sick into the world, and most men grow more diseased by their stay here. All come miserable, and most help on each other’s ruin, and increase their own. Oh, how many go off the stage, and have reason to wish, “Would to God I had perisht’d, “before I saw the light!” So like Hell is this present state, that it’s a wonder we are able to take any delight therein. God is serious with people in their younger years, and they heed it not. Ministers are earnest with young people, and they regard it not: Ah, poor wretches! they think we have nothing to do with them. Oh, young ones! Help us to mourn to day: For I am calling on men to mourn for you, who in your youth yield your selves up to your lusts, and thereby are injurious to Christ, and cruel to your own souls; and will you be unmoved?

Inf. 2. What care is incumbent on parents and masters, in the managing of young persons? Youth is vain, and that bespeaks

bespeaks a suitable carriage. O parents, you don't beget angels, but sinful children; you breed up corrupt ones, and not perfect ones. Few are sanctified in the womb, and therefore you should deal with children, as with depraved and corrupt persons, as with them whose childhood and youth are vanity. The very distemper directs parents and masters in their duty and carriage towards their children: I shall especially name parents in my directions.

(1.) Children are ignorant; oh therefore take occasion to instruct them. Alas! canst thou let thy children be unacquainted with God, and insensible of their own misery, or of the way of their escape? What, must thy child be inspired, or it must perish for want of knowledge? If it must know, pray who is fittest to teach it? upon whom does it lie in point of duty, as it does upon you? And who has the advantage of doing it as thou hast? Who is so like to prevail with thy child as thy self? None faithfully dedicates his child to God in infancy, that will not carefully instruct him when of age to learn.

(2.) Youth have unruly appetites; and therefore don't indulge them. Oh that every parent here had but his heart open to what I say! and I speak it out of pity to the souls of young ones. 'Tis an ill practice in parents, to feed their child by the cravings of its lust, and not by their

their own judgment. I will tell you the mischief of it; besides the laying a foundation of distemper in age, it gives the appetite an un governable force. Children being always indulged in what they crave, cannot deny themselves any thing they desire: And by the same rule, that they must now eat and drink what and when they will, while they are under your care; they will be drunk and whore, &c. when they grow in years. Their reason cannot bridle their appetite then, if yours (which ought to guide them) neglect to do it now. Oh dreadful thing! that any children's appetites should come from under their parents tuition unbridled. I look on nothing as a greater reproach to parents. And what's the ground of all wickedness in the world, more than an inordinate appetite? yet how few parents do help to cure it, while curable! whereas an appetite curbed in childhood would endure a denial in age.

(3.) Youth have violent humours, and selfishness; and therefore don't foolishly gratify them. A child left to himself, brings his mother to shame. Oh, what a devilish fight! how pleasing to Satan, to see children cockered, and youth indulged? It's peevish, then all must be done to please it; it's obstinate, and it must have its will; it's revengeful, and it must not be checked: This is the way of most parents. And
Childhood and Youth.

'tis just with God, that child should break your hearts, whose will you never broke. How many poor creatures will have cause in hell to curse their parents? Dreadful! that they prove the worst enemies to their children, under a pretence of fondness.

(4.) Youth have many lusts, and are prone to sin; therefore be afraid for them, and prevent all occasions. Job, when his children had been feasting, offered burnt-offerings for them, left they should have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts. Oh that parents would consider, what brittle vessels children be! what dried tinder youth is! Occasions tho' small, over-rule young persons. What then? Oh then be persuaded to choose the company of your children for them; see that it be of their own sex, and virtuous. Put them to trades, and such trades as have the least shares; place them in families, where most good is to be got, and least evil to be catch'd. Find them business and fulness of employ, and cut out their time for them. Parents, learn this wisdom, that your children have no time for idleness. Marry them as soon as convenient, if so be you are not very certain of their sobriety.

(5.) The vanity of youth is deeply rooted; therefore be importunate pleaders, and sharp correctors. If advice prevail not, 'tis not an easy thing to cure a child of its vanity, or youth of its folly. Foolishness

Proverbs xxii. 15.
The Vanity of

ness is bound up in the heart of a child, but the rod of correction will drive it far from him; and withhold not correction from thy child, and he shall not die. I look upon it as a sad sign of growing villany in the next age, that correction is become unfashionable. The Lord pity us!

Let me tell you once for all, Sirs, youth is chiefly governed by fear; and they that lose the benefit of that passion, lose the greatest advantage which youth have to be manag'd or improv'd by. People may talk of love, but God's enjoining the rod so oft, discovers that it will prevail but with very few. Wisdom must be exercised in this matter, as the end may be best attained: But be assured, the blood of that child lies at the parent's door, who might have been reform'd by correction, and was not. Can parents forget God's severe judgment against Eli, for his indulgence to his sons? Or do you think, that children are now so harmless, that they need not be corrected? I should have call'd you to give them good examples, as being powerful means to incline them, who strictly observe, and are prone to imitate you: They are apter to evil than good; deny them no help to their holy improvements, and create them no hindrances.
But time prevents me.

Inf. 3. How should young ones bear the rebukes and restraints of superiors, under a sense of their own vanity? Here I call to young ones again. Parents and masters know what will harm you, better than you do your selves; they know how weak you are to resist temptations; they know what's sinful and destructive, better than you. Oh therefore thank God! and thank them that are over you, who endeavour your healing, and do not suffer sin to lie upon you. If you be good your selves, you'll do the same for your children when you have them; therefore don't take that ill, which is your necessary cure: But reckon thus with your selves, "Am I vain! Then, though I have not the liberty I would, and have not the allowance I desire, matters are better order'd for me; for I can't bear those other things."

Inf. 4. How attentive ought you to be to all the advices and pleadings of your relations, as being design'd to heal you? Oh! for thy soul's sake, young one, never let the advice of thy parents be lost; never let thy friends counsel and reproof be lost; because 'tis all designed to remove this disease. Thou dost not see the hell thou art just running into; thou dost not see the heaven thou art flying from; thou dost not see the God thou hast provok'd; thou dost not know the misery thou art under; thou art ignorant what grace, what wisdom thou wantest. How much must thou thou learn and attain, before thou art wise, or good! Thou art ignorant of many snares, and sins; thy folly hides thy folly from thee. Oh therefore! be heartily intent to all their advices, and say to thy self, "Lord, is this for my cure, " and shall I neglect it? Is this reproof " for my good, and shall I make light of " it? Is all this pains to heal my poor " diseased soul, and shall I cast it behind " my back? God forbid!"

Inf. 5. How great a wonder of grace is a young convert? and how thankfully should such acknowledge it? Oh the power, that makes the vain prodigal come to himself! How near does God come to the soul, to tame it, when 'tis like a wild ass's colt? How efficacious is Grace, that overcomes lust in its greatest rage? and that deadens temptations when they strike on youth, so prone to relish the offer, and yield to it? Oh blessed work! that inclines us to fear that God, whom in our youth we are so apt to despise.

Having laid these things before you, I shall now offer,

Secondly, Two general Uises of Exhortation, and apply particularly to you.

Exh. 1. Reflect on your selves, whether you are under this vanity, or delivered from it. Young folks, I speak mostly to you, and therefore I intreat you for for the Lord’s sake to lay to heart what I am saying. Your case is dismal, you are born vain, and prone to be vain; are you still so, or not? It is a great work that goes to the healing of you; is that work passed on thee? It is a great deal of God goes to the making a youth good, and serious; have I felt that? Pray ask your selves, “Am I vain, or am I not? Is my heart “a spring of divine motions, or of beastly inclinations?” Young people, how is it with you? Try your ways. Are they under the government of grace, or of lust? Are they under the conduct of wisdom or folly? Ask your selves, “Do my "ways profit, or hurt people?” Is it not time to ask?—What, Sirs! are the years you have spent unfit to be enquired after? or is thy sin not worth being concerned about? Oh! ask your selves often, “What am I doing? whither am I going? does my walk please God, or provoke him? do I walk with him, or do I forfake him?” Try and judge impartially. It’s thy greatest concern: Thou mayest deceive thy self, but thou canst not deceive thy God, who will judge as the matter truly stands with thee. How is it with you, Oh young ones! There is none here, but ought to be concern’d, how it is with them. You will be concern’d, nay, within a while you must be concern’d; therefore therefore enquire into this to day, and ne-ever rest 'till it be determined.

Exh. 2. Receive Directions suitable to your case. And here I must divide this whole assembly into two parts: [1.] Such as are under the power of vanity; and, [2.] Such as are by grace delivered from it. One of these two is the case of every one in this assembly. Young and old, you are still under the power of vanity, or you are delivered from it. There is a great difference in your case, I'll speak to each.

[1.] As to those of you, who are yet under the power of this vanity.

Poor souls! would you be delivered? Or have you a mind to continue what you are? Come, children, dare you be still blind, and still obstinate? Shall thy soul that was made for God, be a cage of unclean birds? Shall thy tongue which is thy glory, be employed to his dishonour? Oh young body! Shall not Christ heal thee of that nature, which the devil introduced? Wilt thou live a brute and a devil still? Shall Satan serve himself of thy parts, and of thy strength, and of thy opportunities? Shall the devil say of thee, "Here's a "child, I hope, will do me a great deal "of drudgery? here's a young person will "do my work while he lives, and be "damned when he dies?" Young folks, Satan stands by, and seems to speak thus of

of you. And must Christ all this while weep over thee, and say, "Here's a young thing that's my creature, but he will rebel against me as long as I spare him? Here's a youth fit to serve me, but he will bring on me all the dishonour that he can, and obstruct my interests as far as he is able. Here's a stripling that I bought with my blood, but he serves Satan before me, and will not be saved, unless against his will?" For the Lord's sake lay these things to heart to day! What say you, child, to this? What say you, young people? I hope some of you will be ready to answer, "O Sir, help me! give me some counsel; for I am weary of this present condition, and would be in a better!" If so, take these few advices, and resolve to follow them in earnest.

1. Believel how bad thou art by nature, and bewail it before God. Oh, 'tis thy picture I have been drawing, as bad as it is! Come poor young folks, you that pride your selves when you look in the glass, could you but see your souls with a right eye, you would abhor your selves. Young people, will you believe God speaking of you? does not he say, you are vain and vile? Will you believe all the wise people that know you? and will they not all agree in this, that thou art a sinful wretched creature? Doth not thy own experience convince convince thee? Oh friend! own it, and go away mourning. How canst thou but do so, when thou considerest, "My heart is filthy, my affections disorder'd, the powers of my soul poor and wound-ed, the image of God lost, Satan's nature is visible upon me!" What a reproach doth every title fasten? What can be said worse of thee, than that thou art thus? Is this a Case to be rested in? Is this a state to be quiet in? Yet this is thy case, O young person! by nature thou art full of what's hateful to God, and hurtful to others; thou art intent on thy own ruin. Oh, Sirs! the most innocent young sinner here, is fuller of poison than a toad, and filthier than a swine: All of you are thus by nature; and yet thou remainest so.

2. Consider often, how miserable thou art whilst thou continuest thus vain. Danger will affright some, whom sin will not. But, O how unable am I to represent the horror of this to you! Young people, you are children of wrath, as well as others. Every lust is a killing wound; every step is on the brink of hell. There's not a wicked child in this congregation, but I can stand over it, and say, "Here's a child, with whom God is angry every day; here's a young body, for whom God reserves his wrath, and sees his time a coming." Young people, sure you you will be afraid to go home, and say, "I am a sinner; and I am an impenitent sinner, and therefore an unpardoned sinner; a sinner for whom everlasting wrath is reserved." Once for all, you resolve to be wicked; and God cannot but be just. You will not be born again; and God must then keep you out of his kingdom. You will live after the flesh; ay, and God is as resolved, you shall die in your sins. Come young people, God will be as peremptory as you, and his will shall stand. Therefore tremble to go out of this congregation, unless in a founder mind than you came.

3. Be convinced, that nothing short of renewing Grace can savingly heal thee. Morality may polish thee; fear and shame may restrain and conceal a sinner; but 'tis only grace can truly alter a sinner. Oh my friends, it must be a new heart, or it will always be a vain heart. Vain inclinations will govern, 'till God writes his law there. The youngest must be a new creature, or natural corruption will baffle all pretensions.

4. Be assur'd, Grace cannot be had but from God, through Christ, by the operations of his Spirit. Don't think it an easy thing to attain grace, though it be necessary to have it. Young folks, God must open his treasures anew, or you will for ever want it. Christ must plead for thee, or thy disease is incurable; he must act towards thee as Redeemer, and not merely as Creator, unless he pass by thee as one rejected. He seeks the lost sheep; he makes the stubborn willing: Faith is his gift; consent is his purchase, as well as the blessings annexed to it. There is no other name by which we can be saved; there is no other fountain of grace or help. Know also, that the Spirit must give of Christ's fulness: He must enlighten thee, O child, or thou wilt go blind to thy grave; he must renew thee, or thou wilt die in thy uncleanness. Christ made the atonement, but the Spirit makes us capable of its application. Christ hath acquired a fulness of grace and blessings; it's by the Spirit he imparts thereof to man. Men cannot renew thee; Means of themselves are too weak to alter thee. Oh, then look upwards! wait upon God; direct thine eye to Christ; depend on the holy Spirit, as able to conquer thy reluctance, and ready to work by the means to which his presence is promised.

5. Observe, that the more thou sinnest, and the longer thou art graceless, the more opposition thou layest in the way of grace. Think seriously of this; the hopes of the soul are upon the Spirit's working, and the disposedness of the heart to yield to his motions. Oh, my friends! will you go on in sin? then the Spirit of God
Childhood and Youth.

God will leave you, he will not always strive: The more you sin, the more you quench the Spirit. Will you go on in sin? then your heart will be hardened the more through the deceitfulness of sin. Wilt thou go on delaying? then to morrow it will be harder to prevail with thee than to day. Oh! therefore be alarmed to day. More sin will strengthen your lusts, and further prejudice your soul against Christ. Is not conversion difficult enough already? and is there need to make it next to impossible? For the Lord's sake consider! greater offences may make God and men say of thee, "This wretch is resolved against grace, he arms himself against hope." 6. Resolve within thy self, that thou wilt follow after Christ, and throw off thy vanity without delay. Oh, that I could but get this consent from you all this day! that all the young people in this congregation would say, O Lord, Amen, Amen! Come, poor sinners, put it to your selves this moment: Say, "For this I will pray, that I may cease to be vain; "I will meditate for this; I will hear for this." O young folks, that are yet in a state of sin, you have work enough for your time! Sometimes you know not how to pass away your time. What, spiritually blind, and not know how to pass away time? What, dead and graceless, and not know how to pass away time? A sinner wild wild in his frame, and have no work? Oh! be intreated this day to be earnest with God, and never be quiet till he has given thee wisdom instead of folly; till he has given thee sobriety instead of rashness; humility instead of conceit; calmness instead of passion; truth instead of falsehood. Never be satisfied till God has brought thee to live to the best and highest purposes. And, Oh, that every soul would say Amen! How would Satan be disappointed? how would heaven rejoice? It would be thy best day, and the entrance of eternal life.

_obj._ But I believe some here are ready to say, "Sir, must I now change? must I now stop my vanity? Surely 'tis too soon; sure I might be vain a little longer; there's no danger in it, I hope."

_ans._ My address to you is, for this instant; even to day, harden not your hearts. Oh child! just now cease to be vain; 'tis late enough with the youngest of you. It's not too soon to stop a wicked course. Now, now thou shouldst yield to Christ: If you ask, Why now? I tell you, (1.) Because young people's souls shall be saved or damned by the same rules as the old ones, if they be past infancy.

Oh, if you die to night, God will judge you by the gospel! and that's the lowest rule that God can judge you by. Youth must be judged, as well as men: Young ones, that that obey not the gospel, shall not escape the vengeance.

(2.) God is concerned at, and provoked by the vanity of children. Pray consider: You think, it may be, that God takes no more notice of what you say or do, than you do your selves. Alas! you are deceived: Don't you think, God was angry with the little children, whom he slew by the Bears for deriding the prophet? God notes what you do: Young ones, God doth not rule old men, and leave children to their own wills. His laws are prescribed to young men, under the same threats, as to the old; and it's not indifferent to him what you do. God observes what you do, as much as any other person; for you are his subjects, who were made for his glory. You serve him, or his enemy the devil; and what you do, is good, or evil.

(3.) The youngest of you are under vows to God against vanity. I suppose, you were entered into God's covenant by your parents: And was not a holy heart, and a serious godly life engaged in that covenant, in opposition to sin and Satan? You are dedicated to God in your infancy; you are his, and not your own. Young children! what, will you lye to God now? will you be perjur'd now? Oh, God forbid! Dare any young person here say, "I was given to God in my infancy, but I now retract it? I was sworn to be the Lord's,
"Lord's, but I will not keep to him?" Baptism will sink those children of believers, who perform not their vows, and practically renounce their God.

(4.) Let me tell you, if you remain vile all your youth, a thousand to one but you will ever be so. You may die before you are old, and then you are undone: But if you live, and are not converted when young, it's improbable that ever you should. Oh, it's ill dealing with old sinners! they are conceited, full of prejudices, and immersed in worldly cares; the calls and threatenings of God are grown familiar to them, and their souls stupid and void of affection. God makes now and then an instance of grace in them, but 'tis rare. The last hour Converts are next to miracles. Most find how true it is, that Prov.xxix. 1. be that hardens his heart, being often reproved, shall die without remedy. Again,

(5.) Oh, what service mayst thou do for God, when thou ceasest to be vain betimes! Come, my friends, what a heap will every day's little come to in time? If young persons would but now begin to be holy, tho' they act but a little for God every day, it will at length amount to much; as we say, he that begins with the sun, will make a long day's journey. Oh, how much do young people do for the devil, in a state of sin, when they live long! how large is the roll of their transgressions?
gressions? And how much might they do for God in a state of grace? How many may bless God for thee? and what a publick blessing mayst thou prove? Thou mayst thus be an eminent Saint, much improved for heaven, and abundant in the fruits of righteousness.

(6.) Our youth will be the plague, or hope of this land, in this great crisis. Great things are before us; the rapid motion of providence hints no common matters. There have of late been many ways taken to debauch young people in their manners, to prejudice them against holiness and sobriety. Nevertheless the holy God has seasoned some young ones; there are many looking heaven-ward; and God seems designed to reform the rest. Well, whether of these two prevail, doth determine England's lot. Oh, if our youth grow yet more profligate, God is about to leave us! If he recover our youth, we may hope he'll yet continue amongst us. Young ones, I would be earnest with you; for God indicates his mind to England by you. Oh! be you all ready to say, "Can I help to save a nation? By the grace of God I will be one of those that will do it; let Satan, and the world, and the flesh struggle with me as they can."

(7.) This youthful vanity continued in, will be the grief and wounding of thy age, though thou shouldst be converted then.
then. Little do you now know, what youthful sins may cost you in old age. Thou makest me to possess the iniquities of my youth; says Job. Oh! how bitter will the remembrance of past villanies be? How wilt thou tremble, to think thou hast help'd any one in the way to hell, when thou thy self art got out of that road? How will it grieve thee, to think thou hast been a means to damn any soul? Can it be a little thing to thee? The joy of late Converts is abated by the thoughts of youthful sins. Paul carry'd it to the grave with him, that he was a persecutor in his youth. Believe me, Sirs, the evidence of our conversion, when late, is more than made up by the innocency of our lives, when converted young: And they are to blame, who seem to complain, that gross villanies have not made their change more remarkable.

Thus I have done with the first Sort I was to speak to: God grant, it may be to such purpose, that none may go out of this place unwearied and unresolved; unwearied with his vanity, and unresolved to put an end to it! And now,

[2.] As to those of you, who are through grace delivered from this vanity.

Before I enter on this, I must declare, you are our joy, and our crown. I would I could speak it of every one here to day: Oh,
Childhood and Youth.

Oh, that every young one in this place were of this number! You are our comfort, that God has some to propagate religion when we are dead and gone. How lovely is God's image in your tender years! Your grace is less questionable now, than it would be if you were aged. I say, your conversion is more evident now; for you are now in your health and heat; you are now under the force of temptation; you are not decrepit, and aged, and under the government of fear, as old folks be. Oh, my friends! what but Grace could win your consent to Christ now, when the devil and the world are strongly bidding for it? You are like to reap the largest harvest, because you have the longest seed-time. You young ones that do fear the Lord betimes, you are like to be the more remarkable in heaven. All the blessings that belong to the eldest Saint, belong to you; and Christ as truly loves you. The youngest believer in this place may rejoice in all the fulness of Christ, as his store-house and security; he may read over all the greatest promises of the gospel with comfort, as his own. We bless God for you: Bless God for your selves, that he hath adopted you for his so soon, and thereby prevented much sin, and made you early blessings. For your sake we hope, the Gospel will not be removed from England: How happy are each of you?

Your
Your parents can die comfortably, now that you are in Christ. Your friends look with joy upon you, as secure in your better part. Oh the comfortable aspect that every such soul affords!

I will give you a few words of advice; and let them be attended to, and carefully observed, as Directions to such as are converted in their youth.

I. Be watchful over your selves, because some vanity remains in the best while here. Satan would more gladly overcome you than others; and he knows there's matter for temptation to work on in thee. Youthful years are subject to youthful lusts:

2 Tim. ii. 22.

Young Timothy himself was warned of them by wise Paul. Therefore don't venture on occasions of vanity; don't venture into temptations to sin: Nothing but perfect Grace perfectly heals the Sin of your constitution. Young ones, you don't think you are perfect! you are not thoroughly clean; therefore walk carefully, walk watchfully. Take care of voluptuousness, for there is some unruliness in thy appetite still: Take care of wanton dalliance, and walk with all purity, for there is still some disposition to uncleanness. Still take care of evil company; for youth may be entrapped, though they are good: Avoid all frothy society, for youth is apt to be persuaded to losses of time and levity: Therefore walk with watchfulness in whatever you Childhood and Youth.

2 Tim. v. 3.

you are doing. You are not in heaven, though in a state of grace; you are not perfect, though upright; therefore keep a jealous eye, while your green years continue.

2. Keep humble and modest as to your opinions; for Truth admits the disquisitions of age and a long study. Young people think every notion they have gotten is infallible; and every plausible reason is with them unanswerable. But let me tell you, you will change your judgments, it may be before you die: And too much confidence in youth, leads a man to Scepticism in age: Be not wise therefore in your own conceits. You are subject to error; in deep things your knowledge can be but superficial; if you live long, you will blush at your present confidence: And therefore, don't presently take up notions; determine not haughtily difficult points. Make no noise about singular opinions, and do not rashly censure men that are wise and aged; whose deep thoughts are preferable, to a voluble tongue, or luxuriant fancy.

3. Design and furnish yourselves for great service for God in the world. I would earnestly bespeak a mercy for the next age: Resolve an eminency in holiness. I would have every young convert here resolve to be one of the highest saints. Resolve to do much for God's name and gospel; and if you have hopeful abilities, resolve to be great great blessings to your country; side with the best cause, and the best men. You may live to have greater opportunities to serve God, than we have had; you may do so, and I hope you will do so. The Lord furnish our youth with abilities transcendent to ours, as their work is like to be above ours! Oh, my friends, I would have you therefore prepare your selves; get your heads well enlightened, get your hearts well enflamed with Love to God and men. Labour to be industrious in your calling, that you may have estates to do good withal; for idleness and waste make persons too poor to do great service; whence they live as shrubs though planted young. Study good Catechisms, as a guard against errors. Lay up rules of prudence for your conversation, but beware of craftiness and little base designs. Observe your constitution, that sickness may not prevent your use. Get such an elocution, as may give advantage to what you speak, &c.

4. Admit the helps, and put your selves under all the instituted engagements of Christ's members.

Admit the helps.—Sirs, we have good books; see that you carefully peruse them: Read the Scriptures; ay, and labour to be well furnish'd, and skill'd in them from your youth. Set your selves to hear Sermons; especially put your selves under the labours and conduct of the best Ministers.

Contrive
Contrive every one of you to fit under that Ministry, that truly understands, and plainly and powerfully urges, the great things of the Gospel, viz. the mysteries, promises, and laws of our Redeemer. I tell you why I say this; young ones are apt to like the Preacher, that has fancy rather than weight, strong affections rather than judgment; that has vain jingles rather than solid truth; and that is earnest for small matters above essentials. Oh take it from me to day! all hearers favour of their Pastor. Give me therefore a Pastor, that's likest to ripen for a heavenly life, and not to amuse me with little fine-spun notions, where light carries not its evidence. Prefer moderate Pastors above others; men who are more intent on the great things of the gospel, than lesser matters; men who allow for different conceptions in others, knowing themselves to be imperfect; men who insist on no terms of, or bars to, communion, but what Christ hath made. If God do not deliver the growing age from a contentious, dividing, uncharitable temper, I shall say, the next fiery struggles will hazard the life of religion, and sacrifice Love (the very heart of religion,) to every trifle, and to disputable notions, which hath sorely wounded us. Value moderate men; wise men are always such. Your furious dividing Bigot is unacquainted with himself, and is incapable of taking up the body of divine truths, as they stand in their order and place. Hence one thing fills his mind, and that commonly the least; and all his zeal is laid out in that, while he confounds truth and error. Few men have heads clear enough to distinguish truth. Truth and error lie oft so near, that the man who has not the clearest judgment, and the conduct of the Spirit, will easily fail; much more such whose parts are low, and whose uncharitable temper excludes the assistances of the Spirit.

Further, I call you young ones to attend at the Lord's supper. You are dedicated to God by baptism, in the right of your parents: That was not thy act, but theirs for thee; that was not in thy own right, but in thy parents right. The first solemnizing of thy own profession is at the Lord's table, or in order to it; therefore I call you to make conscience of that. Young people, I say, make conscience of it. I tremble to think, how we differ from the church in former ages; that people now should be so backward to attend the Lord's supper.

Obj. But some may object, "Pray how old must we be, that come to the table of the Lord?"
Childhood and Youth.

Ans. I answer, he is old enough, that can give evidence of his consent to be the Lord's, and when he can act the graces that belong to a Sacrament, and improve the matter contained therein: Whenever any can do this, age is no obstacle. I would not scruple one of fourteen, no more than I would one of fifty, where there's a credible profession of grace, and a competent knowledge of the great essentials of religion, and a conversation suited to it. Therefore, my friends, make conscience of this great duty; for I am afraid, our young professors remain giddy, for want of this and of pastoral conduct. I fear, you want strength for want of this; and comfort for want of this; and Satan has great advantage against our young professors, because they are not more established and steady than they be. Therefore if thou hast given up thy self to be the Lord's; and if God has enlightened thy mind to understand the great things of the Covenant; thou hast a claim, and thou oughtest to make it. Sure thou art old enough to consent to be Christ's, when thou art fit to give thy self in marriage.

5. Dispose of your selves to the greatest safety, and the most usefulness. You that are servants, chuse no family where God is not worshipped; for a-curse and a snare snare is there, besides the want of those daily helps which you stand in need of. You that are changing your dwellings, go to no place where the gospel is not; live not in a country where Christ is a stranger as to his institutions. You young ones that are about marrying! Be sure that Grace be the first thing that you provide for. God knows, how much easier it is to stifle good beginnings, than to conquer riveted custom; and it's much easier to be overcome by a bad wife, than a bad wife to be converted by a good husband. Know this, my friends, he that does not wisely contrive for his soul, as a man in danger, will rue it sooner or later. God is not bound to help us, when we run out of his way.

6. Reckon upon a world of troubles and snares, and be still preparing for them. Oh young people, be every day arming your selves, for you may be every day attacked. Don't promise your selves too serene a state on this side heaven: In the world you shall have trouble. Thy work is a warfare, and holds for life; temptations will assault, disappointments and scandals will try; the best men may be a stumbling-block: Be fit for every thing, and resolved to hold on thy way. It is hard work; but Christ hath undertaken to assist thee, and heaven is worth thy thy labour. Oh do not think and act, as if you were to have your resting place here, where Satan hath so much power, and sin so great an interest!

7. Still grow in grace, and usefulness, with age. Though thou art good for thy time, thou art not so good as thou mayst be, nor oughtest to be; much less so good as you should resolve to be. Oh let not age's dulness be reproached by the vigour of your espousals! Take care, that Jer. ii. 2. time adds to thy light, to thy love, to thy strength and fruit. Move heaven-ward, as days are prolonged.

8. Familiarize the Word as your instructor and monitor. How should a young man cleanse his way, but by taking heed to the Word? Let the Word be the man of thy counsel; take the Scripture for thy rule, and resolve to live by it. Oh servants! look what God makes your duty Col. iii. in Scripture; will that allow you to be idle, insolent, or wasteful? Children, see Eph. vi. what God makes your duty to your parents, and to your other relations: May you be rebellious, unkind? &c. The Word is the true measure and light. Alas! the oldest of us are sure to stumble without the Word; what then can young ones do? Therefore study the Scriptures more, search them, and labour in every thing to manage your selves by them. U 3 Sirs, Sirs, I would have no one here ignorant of a Rule proper to most of the exigencies of his life; and let that be still before thy eyes. I will give you young people one advice, that may do you good all your days, and that's this: I would have you all consider what temptations you are like to meet with, and what are the duties you are like to be called to; always have an apt Scripture lodged in thy mind, suitable to each of these; and resolve to do nothing, purpose nothing, before thou hast first consulted that Scripture in thy mind: This would be a stated way of avoiding much sin. Young people! you that are in Christ, labour to live to these rules.

I shall now conclude: I have been plainly telling all of you, Childhood and youth are vanity. You all come vain into the world, &c. Are you altered, or are you not? Do you still grow more vain, or more serious? Should God come this day, and divide this assembly, and set the vain on the right hand, and the serious on the left; O child, O young man, on which side wouldst thou be found? Oh put it to your selves; what answer canst thou return? Wilt thou go away and resolve to be as vain as ever, after all that has been said? If that be thy resolve, would to God thou hadst not been here!
here! this Sermon will be a thorn in thy side for ever. But if from what has been said, you go away resolving through grace to be faithful in the practice of all these directions, given you for the cure of your vanity; then thou wilt have cause for ever to bless God for the 25th of December, 1690.
A Youth's Catechism.

Quest. H A T art thou?

Answ. I am a creature endued with reason, who must be in heaven or in hell for ever. Rom. ii. 9, 10.

Q. Who made thee?

A. God made me; by whose power every creature was made. Isa. xlv. 12.

Q. What is the God that made thee?

A. God is a Spirit perfectly good, great, wise, holy, present everywhere, and without beginning or ending.

Q. How many Gods be there?

A. There is but one true God, Father, Son, and Spirit. 1 Cor. viii. 6. 1 John v. 7.

Q. What did God make thee for?

A. God made me to bring him glory, and to be happy in him. Rom. xi. 36.

Q. Where
A Youth's Catechism.

Q. Where may you know how to bring glory to God, and to be happy in him?

A. In my Bible, where he declares his nature, and his will. 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

Q. What condition was mankind created in?

A. God made all of us holy and happy in Adam our first father, and common head. Eccl. vii. 29. Gen. i. 27.

Q. By what rule did God govern all men in Adam?

A. God required sinless obedience, as a condition of life, and denounced death, if man should in any thing break his law. Gen. ii. 17. Gal. iii. 10.

Q. Did mankind continue holy and happy, by a perfect obedience to this law of innocency?

A. No: Adam sinned against God, and thereby he corrupted the human nature, and became subject to all the misery which the lawthreatned against sin. Rom. v. 12, 18, 19.

Q. What condition wert thou born in?

A. I was born in a very miserable and sinful condition. Eph. ii. 3. Psal. li. 5.

Q. How camest thou to be born in this condition?

A. I must be miserable, if sinful; and I could not but be born sinful, because my nature was depraved in Adam, from whom it descends so to me by the line of my forefathers. Job xiv. 4. and xxv. 4.

Q. Why
Q. Why must thou be sinful, because thy nature was at first depraved?
A. God enacted this as the law of generation, that Adam should beget his children in natural likeness. Gen. v. 3.

Q. What if thou shouldst die in that condition wherein thou wert born by nature?
A. I should be undone, and be with the devils in hell for ever. John iii. 5, 36. Rom. v. 17, 18.

Q. Doth the law of innocency provide no way for thy deliverance out of that misery?
A. The law of innocency provides no way for my deliverance out of this misery, as great and dreadful as it is. Rom. iii. 19, 20. Gal. iii. 21, 22.

Q. Why dost thou think so?
A. Because the law of innocency admits no pardon, but condemns for one sin; and I daily find that I have many sins. Rom. iii. 23. Jam. iii. 2.

Q. Is there no way then to avoid that sin and misery thou wert born in?
A. Yes; there is, by the rich mercy of God, a way to save lost sinners. Rom. viii. 3. 1 Tim. i. 15.

Q. What is the way which God hath contrived to save lost sinners?
A. The way of pardon and reconciliation revealed in the gospel. Rom. iv. 7; 2 Tim. i. 10.

Q. How did God appoint a way of pardon and reconciliation?
A. The
A. The Father appointed his Son to be the Saviour of sinners, and Christ accepted of that work under certain terms agreed on between them both. Zech. vi. 13. John xvii. 3, 20, 21, 25.

Q. What was appointed to, and undertaken by Christ, as Saviour or mediator?

A. Christ was to assume our nature, and therein to fulfil all righteousness, and die a sacrifice for our sins, and to save all the elect committed to him. Isa. liii. 5. John x. 15, 16.

Q. What was promised to Christ, as the reward of his undertaking?

A. There was promised to Christ, besides the glory of his person, as God-Man, that his obedience and sufferings should be accepted as an effectual price for the reconciliation of all such sinners to whom it was applied. Isa. liii. 10, 11, 12.

Q. Was there nothing else promised to Christ, with respect to the elect?

A. All the absolute promises of grace in order to the application of his blood, were made to Christ. Gal. iii. 16. 2 Cor. i. 20.

Q. Did our Lord Jesus fulfil all righteousness, and make his soul an offering for sin?

A. He did; and thereby honoured the law, and vindicated the government of our Creator, notwithstanding his gracious dealings

Q. When Christ had thus made atonement, was he sufficient to be a Saviour?

A. Yes: For, (1.) He hath the Spirit and a fulness of grace, with a right to give thereof to men. (2.) All judgment is committed to him whereby he is the law-giver to a sinful world. And, (3.) By the fulness of his merits he hath pardon, peace, and eternal life to dispose of, notwithstanding we had forfeited all into the hands of our Creator. John xvi. 14. John i. 16. John v. 22. Heb. v. 9. Heb. vii. 25.

Q. What more is necessary to restore the happiness of lost man?

A. The application of the effects of Christ's fulness to their persons, that they may be regenerated, pardoned, and saved. Rom. v. 11. Acts ii. 38.

Q. What way doth Christ take to apply his merits for the salvation of sinners?

A. He enacts and publisheth a law of grace, wherein he promiseth pardon and life to such sinners as will accept of him as a Saviour on the terms of the gospel. Heb. xi. 6. John iii. 16, 17, 18. Rom. iii. 26.

Q. What are the terms of the gospel?

Q. What
Q. What is repentance?
A. A sorrow for, and the separation of the heart from sin, as the greatest evil. Jer. xxxi. 18.

Q. What is faith in general?
A. Such a sight of things revealed in the Word, as powerfully affects the heart suitably to the nature of them. Heb. xi. 1.

Q. What is faith in Christ?
A. Such a sight of, and regard to Christ, as causeth the humbled soul to accept of, and come to him as our Prophet, Priest, and King. John i. 12. Mat. xi. 28.

Q. What is it to come to Christ as a Prophet?
A. To yield up our selves to his teachings, believing him infallible. John vi. 45, 68, 69.

Q. What is it to come to Christ as our Priest?
A. Under a conviction of our guilt and the fulness of his merits, to rely on him, as the only atonement for sin, and purchaser of all good for sinners. Gal. ii. 16. Rom. iii. 25.

Q. What is it to come to Christ as King?
A. To acknowledge his sole authority, and submit to all his laws, unfeignedly resolving to obey him in every one of his appointments. Acts ix. 6. Luke xix. 14, 27. Isa. i. 10.

Q. What else doth the gospel contain?
A. It
A. It contains a prophetick account of what God decreed, and a transcript of what was promised to Christ, with respect to the Elect; to say nothing of doctrinal mysteries, rules of a Christian's walk, conditional promises, the danger of sinners that reject Christ, &c.

Q. When did this gospel-rule of life begin?

A. In the first promise to Adam after his fall, though the fullest discoveries of it were reserved till Christ came in the flesh. Gen. iii. 15. Gal. iii. 8. 2 Tim. i. 10. Heb. ii. 3.

Q. Did God ever since the fall propose any way of Salvation, besides this law of grace?

A. No: And every saved sinner was saved by this rule, according to the measure of its discovery that obtained in every age. 1 Cor. x. 4.

Q. How far are all sinners that live under this gospel concerned in it?

A. Life through Christ is freely offered sincerely to every sinner that will repent and believe; and if they do thus, the want of perfection shall not condemn them. Acts iii. 19. Acts x. 43. Acts xvi. 30, 31. Rom. iii. 22.

Q. What if thou dost not accept of Christ?

A. I shall be more miserable than if Christ had never died. 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8. Mat. xi. 24.

Q. Is
Q. Is the mere enabling and publishing the gospel all that Christ hath done towards the application of his merits to elect sinners?

A. Besides that, he hath appointed his Spirit to incline their hearts, and effectually enable them to obey those terms which the gospel requireth. 1 Thes. i. 4, 5, 6. 1 Cor. ii. 10. Gal. iii. 14.

Q. And doth the Spirit thus concur to apply redemption, and enable them to obey the gospel?

A. Yes; and doth not only strive with them, as he doth with others. 2 Cor. iii. 1. Pet. i. 2. 2 Thes. ii. 13.

Q. By what means doth the Spirit work upon Souls?

A. Principally and most usually he works by the gospel itself, putting forth his power thereby, as a seed of life. Gal. iii. 2. Jam. i. 18. Rom. x. 14.

Q. By what part of the gospel doth the Spirit usually work?

A. He is confined to no part; he works by the precepts, by the account of Christ's death, by the promises, threats, or the great rewards; yet which ever of these he works by, it is pursuant to, and in accomplishment of, the absolute promises of grace which were made to Christ. Acts xvi. 30, 31. Gal. iii. 29. Gal. iv. 28.

Q. How dost thou expect to be made willing and able to accept of Christ?

A. Not
A Youth's Catechism.

A. Not by any natural power of my own, who am dead in sin; but by the grace of Christ expressing itself in the operations of the Spirit. Eph. ii. 1, 5. Acts v. 31. Tit. iii. 5.

Q. How doth the Spirit cause the sinner to accept of Christ?

A. By enlightening the mind, and changing the heart in regeneration; whence there is an inclination, will, and ability to accept of Christ. Acts xxvi. 18. Tit. iii. 5.

Q. Doth the Spirit nothing in order to the making the Soul earnest and willing to this?

A. He awakens the soul to a concern for salvation, and a deep sense of its present misery without Christ. Acts ii. 37. Luke xv. 17.

Q. What oughtest thou to do on thy part, in order to get this grace?

A. I must not be idle, but I must (1.) Diligently hear the word. (2.) Pray fervently to Christ for the Spirit's operations. (3.) Consider and bewail my condition. (4.) Put a stop to all ways of sin to my utmost. (5.) Carefully entertain, and improve every motion of the Spirit. And, (6.) Strive with my heart, and urge it with all gospel arguments to obey the call of Christ. Prov. ii. 3, 4, 5. Mat. xiii. 19.

Q. What may a sinner expect when he accepteth of Christ?

A. He
A Youth's Catechism.

A. He may expect, (1.) To be united to Christ in the nearest relation. (2.) To be admitted into a state of pardon and peace. (3.) To be adopted, and made still more conformable to Christ in grace and holiness. (4.) To be supported with strength for service, and perseverance. And, (5.) To be partaker, when he dies, of the glory of Christ in the highest heavens. Eph. v. 30. Gal. ii. 16. John i. 12. Col. i. 11. 1 John iii. 2.

Q. What is the condition of every sinner till he do accept of Christ?

A. He abides under the wrath of God, and hath no personal title to pardon, peace, or glory. John iii. 36.

Q. Is this the condition of the Elect while they abide in unbelief?

A. Yes: For though God hath decreed, and Christ hath purchased, faith and life for them; yet God hath determined by the law of faith, that all are under condemnation until they do believe. Mark xvi. 16. Luke xiii. 3. hence Rom. v. i. viii. 30. iv. 24.

Q. Is not a believer pardoned, before he can put forth any other acts of obedience?

A. Though true faith is a certain principle of obedience, yet as soon as we believe, we are pardoned; even before there can be any time to put forth any other acts of obedience. Gal. v. 6.
Q. Do repentance or faith any way make satisfaction to justice?
A. No: That is only Christ's work; but God hath appointed, that that soul shall repent and believe, on whom pardon for Christ's sake shall be bestowed; and he hath solemnly declared he'll forgive no man till then. Mark xvi. 16. Rom. xi. 20, 23. Heb. iv. 6. John viii. 24. Rom. x. 16. 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8. hence Gal. ii. 16.

Q. What assurance hast thou, that God will forgive and save thee if thou believe?
A. I have God's testimony, and promise; and the seals of the covenant, viz. baptism and the Lord's supper. 1 John v. 9, 10. Acts xxii. 16. Luke xxii. 20. Rom. iv. 11.

Q. Art thou engaged to accept of, and submit to Christ according to the gospel?
A. Yes, I am strongly engaged to submit to Christ, because he bought me with his blood, my parents dedicated me to him in baptism, and love to my own soul requires it. Rom. xiv. 9. Mat. xxviii. 19. Ezek. xxxiii. 11.

Q. On what account wert thou baptized?
A. My believing parents were allowed, and engaged to dedicate me to God as their child; and God graciously admitting the infant seed of believers into covenant, as part of themselves, did seal to me those blessings which my infant state needed, and and was capable of. Deut. xxix. 11, 12.

Q. What doth the covenant bind thee to?
A. To be the Lord's, in a sincere care to know, love, believe, obey, worship and serve him all my days, and to depend on God through Christ for all happiness.

Q. What didst thou engage against?
A. I engaged against being governed by Satan, or the flesh, as my rulers; and against taking up with the world's goods as my portion, and against the customs of the men of this world as my guide. Rom. vi. 14, 15.

Q. When ought a child to know, consider, and agree to this covenant?
A. As soon as he is capable to use his reason, and judge of good or evil, which many are fit to do about seven years old.

2 Tim. iii. 15. Psal. xxxiv. 11.

Q. What if a child through the love of sin, or vanity of mind, will not agree to this covenant when he is capable?
A. He then rejecteth Christ our Saviour, and renounceth the blessings of the gospel. 2 Pet. ii. 1.

Q. Is it a great sin to refuse to agree to this covenant, to which thy baptism engaged thee?
A. It's the damning sin, and the heart of all sin; for, (1.) It's rebellion continued against my maker. (2.) It's ingratitude.
A Youth's Catechism.

tude and perjury to my redeemer. (3.) It's gross injustice to my parents. (4.) It's an affront to all the Godly. And, (5.) It's a self-killing cruelty to my own soul. Psal. ii. 3, &c.

Q. When wilt thou personally consent to this covenant, as the only way of life to sinners?

A. I will truly with my whole soul consent now, and live expressing my consent: And as soon as I understand how to improve the Lord's supper, I will by Christ's help solemnly renew it there.

Q. Ought you upon every fault to question your interest in this covenant?

A. Though I ought to bewail every sin, and seek pardon by faith in Christ's blood; yet I should not doubt my covenant interest, unless my fault be such as gives just cause to question whether my consent was ever sincere. Psal. xxxii. 5. Mat. vi. 12. Psal. xviii. 21, 22, 23.

Q. What is the best joy and pleasure in this life?

A. The deep sense of God's love, and the lively hopes of glory. 1 Pet. i. 8.

Q. What shouldst thou be most afraid of in this World?

A. Of sin; because that provokes my God, and is the cause of all misery. Rom. vi. 23. Heb. xii. 15.

Q. What must thou do to keep from sin?

A. (1.) I must believe every thing to be be a sin, which is against the word of God. (2.) I must humbly look to Christ for strength. (3.) I must avoid all occasions which lead to sin. And, (4.) I must, when I am tempted, consider what a dangerous and evil thing sin is, and resolve against it. 1 John iii. 4. 2 Cor. xii. 8, 9. Gen. xxxix. 9, 10.

Q. What is the sin that most hinders the good of souls, except unbelief?
A. A carnal selfishness, which I ought to deny and mortify. Mat. xvi. 24.

Q. When is one carnally selfish?
A. (1.) When one is governed by his fleshly appetite, humour, or self-will. (2.) When he inordinately pursues the things of the present life. And, (3.) When he loves carnal self above God. Deut. xxix. 19. 2 Pet. ii. 10. 2 Tim. iii. 2, 4. Jam. iv. 4.

Q. What be the sins which professing Christians are most subject to?
A. Hypocrisy, formality, censoriousness, and divisions. 2 Tim. iii. 5. Rev. iii. 1. Mat. xv. 8. Rom. xiv. 3, 10. 1 Cor. xi. 18.

Q. Who are hypocrites?
A. They whose hearts are not truly changed by grace, and who allow themselves in any known sin, or are seemingly religious from some carnal end. Rev. iii. 1. Mat. xxiii. 25, 27. Mat. vi. 5.

Q. What is formality?
A. To
A. To be satisfied with the bare outward doing of the duties of religion, while the heart is not answerably affected, or employed. Hos. vii. 14. Mal. i. 8, 13.

Q. Wherein lies the life and power of religion?
A. (1.) In mortifying sin. (2.) In exercising grace for more communion with God. (3.) In love to God, which is holiness. And (4.) In love to men, which will keep from hurting them, and incline us to seek their good. Col. iii. 5. 1 Tim. iv. 7. 1 Cor. xiii. 3, 6.

Q. Who are the happiest persons in the world?
A. They that have most grace, and do most good.

Q. Who are the hopefulllest children?
A. They that are most afraid of sinning, and are most industrious to know and love God, and become like to Christ.

Q. What graces most adorn children?
A. Humility, meekness, and teachableness.

Q. What must thou do when thou wantest any good?
A. I must in the name of Christ prayearnestly to God, who is ready to give whatever good thing I need. Phil. iv. 6. John xiv. 13. Mat. vii. 11.
Q. From what dost thou receive all good things?
A. From God my Father, who graciously bestows whatever I have for soul or body. Jam. i. 17.

Q. What dost thou owe to God for his daily mercies?
A. (1.) I must love him more. (2.) I must heartily praise him for his goodness. (3.) I must be more careful to please God. And, (4.) I must use his gifts to his glory, that so I may be able to give a good account of my talents. Luke xvi. 3, 10.

Q. By what signs mayest thou try the state of thy soul, whether thou art a true Christian or no?
A. I must faithfully and oft examine my heart and ways by these things:
   (1.) Do I love God above all things, and delight in the thoughts of him? Mat. x. 37. 1 Cor. viii. 3. Psal. civ. 34.
   (2.) Do I unfeignedly accept of, and submit to the Lord Jesus, as my full and only redeemer? John i. 12. Psal. ciii. 3.
   (3.) Is there no sin which I live under the dominion of? Rom. vi. 16. Jam. ii. 10. 2 Sam. xxii. 24.
   (4.) Have I a sincere regard to every command of Christ? Luke i. 6. Psal. xviii. 22.
   (5.) Are my affections more set on heaven than on this world? Luke xii. 34.

X 4  (6.) Are.
(6.) Are the thoughts of heaven sweet to me, as it is a state of perfect holiness, and communion with God and Christ? Eph. v. 27. 1 Cor. xiii. 10. 1 Thes. iv. 17, 18.

(7.) Am I thankful for the worst affliction, if I find I am better, and liker to Christ by it? Psal. cxix. 71. Heb. xii. 11.

(8.) Do I find a soul-renewing power in the truths and duties of religion? Psal. cxix. 50. 1 Pet. ii. 2. 2 Cor. iii. 18.

(9.) Is the scope of my life and aims, to please and honour God, and be meet for glory? Acts xxiv. 16. Luke xii. 43.

(10.) Do I love the image of Christ wherever I see it, and do good men please me best, when they most express the life of Christ in their speech and carriage? 1 John iii. 14. Psal. lxix. 32. 3 John ver. 1, 2, 4.

(11.) Am I more thankful for an interest in Christ, than any temporal good? and am I most concerned to keep this interest unquestionable? Col. i. 12. 1 Cor. ix. 27. Heb. iv. 1. Psal. cxxxix. 23.

(12.) Do I find every holy attainment makes me still hunger and press after more, longing to be perfect? Phil. iii. 12, 13, 14. Mat. v. 6.

(13.) Do I carefully approve myself to God in what I am, and in what I do, despising the opinion of men in compari...
Q. When thy conscience is helped by the Spirit to see these signs in thee, what mayest thou then do?

A. (1.) I may safely rejoice in all the perfections of God, and in the fulness of Christ, as what doth secure my happiness. 2 Tim. i. 12. 1 Cor. i. 30, 31.

(2.) I may comfortably apply to myself all the promises made in the gospel to believers. 2 Cor. vii. 1. 2 Pet. i. 4.

(3.) I may admit a holy joy, and expect death without fear. Rom. v. 2, 5. 1 Cor. xv. 55, 57.

The End.
A LETTER TO THE AUTHOR OF A DISCOURSE OF FREE THINKING:

WHEREIN

The Christian Religion is vindicated, by detecting several Abuses of Free-thinking.

Printed in the Year 1713.
TO THE AUTHOR, &c.

SIR,

S remiss as the Zeal for true Christianity is at present, the faint Remains of it must excite some of different Denominations, to contend for our common Faith. With this View I publish these Sheets, which (except the first Paragraph) were finished for my own use, before I saw any of the Answers to your Discourse, and not a word alter'd upon reading those admirable Tracts. I laid them aside to this Time, to see if I might be excused by what some Dissenters were preparing of the like Nature. But considering the present State of Things, I think it better, to publish what I hastily wrote.
wrote in an infirm State of Health, than that all of us should be silent for so long time, as those more elaborate Answers may require.

Intending this Antidote for such as may regard what's written by a Dissenting Minister, I repent not, that I confined my self to plain serious Reasoning. Nor shall I examine the Quotations, because those from Heathen Authors would be of no use to most of them, to whom I can hope to be serviceable: And as for the English Writers, I think Conformists will vindicate them, for the honour of the Church of England, of which all of them were Members.

Sir, my Design by these Sheets, which I direct to you, is to prove sundry Truths, and to detect the weakness of the (too oft jocular) Insinuations, whereby you attempt to expose them. Nor can I think it impertinent, to produce Scriptures, when I vindicate Christian Friendship, and prove the Eternity of Hell-Torments. The Subject of our Debate I judge too awful, to admit my writing in a way favouring of Levity; and your self in Circumstances, which require me as a Christian, neither to harden you by provoking Injuries, or wrathful Treatment; nor yet to forbear a sober Appeal to your own Conscience. Any Veneration for the most high God, will keep us from jesting with his Name; or sporting with the Scriptures, were it for no other Reasons, than that they contain so much of his undoubted Will, in in the Morality of them; and that their aptitude to serve Divine Purposes, is so demonstrated by their holy effects, as to argue at least a Probability, that the Author of them is no other, than the ever blessed and jealous God.

The very Possibility of a Future State of Retribution, ought to terrifie us from bantering Hell-Torments, and rendering our selves or others obnoxious, by any Opinions, or Speeches, which express a contempt of what may prove to be, the Divine Government, Grace, and Image.

If you have any certain Evidence, that the Scriptures are a Forgery, why did not you produce solid Arguments instead of Ridicule? which can convince no Man, but must be felt as a Degree of Persecution, by all who love the Lord Jesus and his Gospel: And many of these are impartial in their Enquiries; nor is their rational Faculty less instrued by natural Light, by being illuminated by Divine Revelation, and therefore they are as capable of discerning the evidence of Truth, as any who appropriate to themselves the Title of Free-thinkers.

You'll find, I grant (what no true Protestant denies) that every man has a right to Free-thinking about Religion: But I propose some necessary Qualifications; for though we are free to think of any Subject, we are not free to think of every Subject in in what Manner, and to what purposes we please; and much less to confine Free-thinking, only to profane Challenges and impious Censures of all true Religion; right Reason condemns all such Abuses.

It's our Interest to consider, that if men are Subjects of Moral Government, there will be a Rule as well as a Time of Judgment. By this inflexible Rule we shall be justified, or condemned. Truth will then be Truth, and Error be Error, independent on our Apprehensions. If the Gospel be found the Rule of Judgment, you have Cause for trembling, unless God give you Repentance to the acknowledgment of the Truth in this World. But if your Scheme contain that Rule of Judgment, you assure me, that I shall be in no danger by my Opinion; for I not only think freely, which with you is sufficient; but unbiased by any worldly Respects, I join with my Endeavours, many fervent Prayers to God, in the Name of Christ, that I may be directed to know (and obey) the whole Mind and Will of God, signified either by the Light of Nature, or his Revealed Word. Nor can this Addition to what you prescribe, be dangerous, seeing you declare, (pag. 33.) If I do my best, I shall be as acceptable to God, if I should prove mistaken in my Opinions, as if I receive none but right Opinions. May not I hence infer, your Contempt of the Gospel, as any Means of your Convictions,
To the Author, &c.

Tions, to be so far more dangerous, as to oblige me to pray God soon to enlighten your Mind? for as yet I hope it's my Duty, though you should pity my mistaken Concern for you.

If Fame reporteth the true Author, your Character also excites me to wish, that your bright Parts were employed in Defence of the Truth; that your Sober Life were sustained by a Principle of true Faith; and that the Publick may not more ways than one, suffer by this Performance of yours, who are reputed a zealous Lover of your Country. I am,

Sir,

Your faithful Servant,

Daniel Williams.
AD your Discourse been only a Preservative from Popish restraints on our thoughts, it had been reasonable. But as the plausible Rights of the Church undermined all Christian Ordinances; so you seem, by Free-thinking, to arraign and condemn the Gospel and the Christian Religion. You can't then blame any, who have founded on these all hopes of eternal Life and of present Supports, that the following Queries are proposed.

Free-thinking is thus defined by you, pag. 5. By Free-thinking I mean, the Use of the Understanding, in endeavouring to find out the meaning of any Proposition whatsoever, whatever, in considering the Nature of the Evidence for or against it, and in judging of it according to the seeming force or weakness of the Evidence.

Qu. 1. Ought not some Qualifications be added, to distinguish sober, useful Free-thinking, from that which is sceptical and dangerous? Of which hereafter.

Qu. 2. Do you mean only the intrinsic Evidence of every sort of Proposition? For if you intend this, you exclude Revelation as a Divine Testimony from being any determining Evidence of the truth of any Doctrinal Proposition; unless you can account for it as true by Human Reason. For instance, if God hath revealed that the Dead shall rise again, is not this Testimony a sufficient Evidence of this Truth, though it be an extrinsic Evidence; and natural Reason can find no Evidence in the Nature of it, upon which to conclude it, without such Revelation?

Qu. 3. If all men have not an equal Degree of Understanding, nor Advantages to attain the same Degree of Evidence of a Doctrinal Proposition; will not their Judgment of it proportionably differ, about the meaning, and about the truth of it? being they cannot judge alike of the force of the true Evidence, or of the weakness of the contrary: Nor have they equal Evidences, because of lesser helps.

Qu. 4. Can any man who rejects Divine

5. 问题：是否那些判断一个命题的人，无论他们判断的证据看起来多么有力或无力，都可能不确定或误解某些比例？因为那些看似强有力的证据，实际上可能并不那么强大。

6. 问题：是否任何自明的真理，都意味着人类的理解自堕落以来不再需要更多的帮助，来理解、判断信实和职责，以恢复我们的状态？是不是因为人类的理智更加昏暗？是不是因为人类的意志，即使是被其扭曲的欲望，也可能会对理智和公平性产生影响，而这些是需要搜索和判断所有超自然的真理的？甚至，即使是那种关系到实践中的美德，比如自然之光所指示的？这样的光如何超越这些？
You tell us, pag. 5. You will prove this right to think freely.

Qu. 1. If men have a right to such Free-thinking about religious matters, as becomes fallible men, seriously concerned to know Truth in order to Salvation; does it follow, that they have a right to such licentious Liberty of thinking, as argues a contempt of Religion, and carelessness about Salvation?

Qu. 2. Ought not men, when they would use their Understandings to search, in order to judge rightly of Divine Subjects, to see that their Aims are pious, and not to become secure in evil Practices; to see, that they be humble, and not proudly conceited; to see, that they reverence Things sacred, and indulge not profane Levity, or a fondness of Novelties, from a disgust of Truths, because long accustomed to their thoughts, or vulgarly received; and to see, that the Mind is open and attentive to receive Light, by all such ways as God communicates it? and not to reject Revelation, if he chuse that?

Qu. 3. Is it rational to think, the Creatures dependance on God is so inconconsiderable, as that it's needless with our endeavours to find out Truth, to join fervent Prayer to God, that he would open our Understandings, to know the true meaning of Doctrines, and to make a right right Judgment of what we are examining?

Qu. 4. Are not blasphemous, ungodly, unbelieving Thoughts sinful, if indulged, though under pretence of Free-thinking, or as the effect of that?

Qu. 5. Ought not such as enjoy the benefit of Gospel-Revelations greatly to fear, that if they should not like to retain God in their Knowledge, by the Evidence of Gospel-Light, and a Love thereto; lest God give them up to a reprobate Mind, and the Lusts of their own Hearts? For so he did the Heathen, who liked not to retain God in their Knowledge, received by the Light of Nature; and those, who fell under strong Delusions to believe a Lye, cause they received not the Love of Gospel-Truths.

Qu. 6. If you confound these very different Kinds of Free-thinking, and mean to prove, that the ill manner of Free-thinking is proved, by what only proves a warrantable way of Free-thinking; will not all rational Judges condemn your Reasons, as proceeding upon a false State of the Question; and be convinced that they conclude no more, than that men have a right, and obligation, only to that Free-thinking, which takes in the before described limitations?

These limitations to Free-thinking in matters of Religion, are as self-evidently true, true, as that men have a right to Free-thinking at all: And to pretend a right to free-thoughts without such limitations, is to claim a right profanely and proudly to search for matters to undermine and banter all true Religion; under the cover of pleading for that Judgment of private Discretion, which is allow'd by all true Protestants. Granting therefore the force of most of your Reasons, to prove, that it is Man's right and duty to think freely, under the mentioned limitations and adjuncts, I shall remark some Passages only, which may appear inconsistent with that Veneration for revealed Truths, that becomes those who are professed Christians.

You argue, pag. 6. If the Knowledge of no Truth be forbidden us by God, or hurtful to us, then we have a right to know any Truth.

Qu. If God has declared some Truth in such a manner, as to intend our knowing it at present but in part, and to be more perfectly known hereafter; have we a right to know that Truth fully at present? Against whom is that Right pleasurable? Is it against God, who has made known now as much as suits our present State, though he has bounded our Knowledge as to what of it is unrevealed, and requires us to know no more than that which is revealed?

You
Discourse of Free-thinking.

You say, pag. 10. It is impossible that God, when he condescends to teach mankind by Writing or Books, should write as ill or worse than mortal Men, and act against the Rules of Art, &c.—Pag. 11. To understand the Matter of the Bible, requires the most thinking of all other Books; since to be master of the whole, a Man must be able to think justly in every Science and Art.—Pag. 12. Nay, the Morality of the Holy Scriptures is not to be precisely and distinctly understood, without an antecedent Knowledge of Ethicks, &c. So that no Duty whatsoever contained in Scripture, can be precisely and with certainty understood, without a Knowledge of the Law of Nature.

Qu. 1. When God by the Bible intended to teach men Divinity, and not Trades, or common Arts or Sciences; is it rational to judge he writes well or ill, by the aptitude of his Writings to instruct men in the Knowledge of himself and his Will, (which is the end for which he wrote;) or by the aptitude of his Writings, to instruct men in Trades and common Arts and Sciences, which was not his end?

Qu. 2. When God sent his Word to direct in the Way of eternal Life, persons of all countreys and sorts, Young and Old, unlearned as well as learned, simple and more intelligent; is the accuracy of Arts, or is a conduciveness to affect and and impress all sorts, in order to their compliance with the conditions of Eternal Life, the best rule of Writing? The Experience of all pious men (even the most learned) to this Day determine this.

Qu. 3. Had it become the Majesty of God, who dictates, and authoritatively commands, what we are to believe and do, to have written otherwise than he did?

Qu. 4. The Word being written for all future ages of the World, as well as those present, and it mentioning occasionally some things in the Sphere of Nature according to the received Opinion of Mankind in that age; is it a dishonour to the Word, as a rule of divine faith and manners, that we, in after ages, think we are more improved in Natural Philosophy? By the same Rule, those former ages had then disputed the Truth of the Word, as a rule of divine faith and manners in their time; and all must do the same in future ages (when they shall have different notions,) if those occasional Expressions were now accommodated to the present prevailing Sentiments.

Qu. 5. May not one think justly in other Arts and Sciences, and yet be ignorant of those Truths which were principally intended to be taught by the Word? And may not another profitably and savingly know those Truths, and be very unskilful
Discourse of Free-thinking.

Skilful in the other Arts and Sciences? The instances are common: The Philosopher stumbling at the Gospel, from a conceit of his Learning; the plain Man believes, and liveth the Word.

Qu. 6. Will that man think freely to any great or godly purpose, who spends his whole time to be a master only of those parts of the whole Scripture, which he cannot be master of, unless as he is able to judge justly in every Science? (I write the word master with dislike.)

Qu. 7. If an occasional Word in reference to Sailing, Husbandry, Pharmacy, make a precise Skill in those Arts necessary, to become master of the whole of the Scripture; will not the mention of Christ, Holy Ghost, Angel, Heaven, the stated Term of Life, the Judgment Day, and the like Subjects, (which include the principal Sum of Scripture, and as to which those words referring to Arts are used,) make it necessary, that we receive Divine Revelations, which only can give a certain instructive Account of these Things? And if we cannot comprehend the utmost of all those Revelations, is it not rational humbly to own, that our Ability to judge of some Parts of these sublimer Things, is not so proportionable to those, as it is to master sensible Arts and human Sciences, of which nevertheless no man is perfect Master?

Qu. 8. If
Qu. 8. If a man has no antecedent Knowledge of Ethicks, but acquires it by Study of the Scripture, why may not he, as precisely and certainly understand the Morality of the Scriptures, as by any other external Means? For where is the Law of Nature so fully explained, so certainly stated, and particularly applied, as in the Bible?

Qu. 9. Is not the Sense of those Words very ambiguous, or worse; No Duty whatsoever contained in the Scripture, can be precisely and with certainty understood, without a Knowledge of the Law of Nature? It's true, some degree of the Knowledge of the Law of Nature is necessary, to know the Duties enjoined by that Law; and yet those, as they be recorded in the Scripture, may be known by us as that Law is there explained: But is it therefore true, that the Scriptures contain no Duties but what the Law of Nature contains? Or is it true, that we cannot know those additional Duties with certainty upon Scripture Evidence? or that the unwritten Law of Nature can give us a more precise or equal understanding of those Duties, as we may attain by what is recorded, explained, and established, by the Scripture Revelation, seeing this is the way by which we come to the first notice, that God requires such positive Duties?
Discourse of Free-thinking.

You argue, pag. 13. That if men have no right to think freely, they must, if they will have any Opinions, run into the grossest Absurdities in Principle and Practice.

Qu. Does not this depend on the due Regulation of men's thoughts? For how great mischief in the Christian Church did thinking, when free from the restraints of the Scriptures? Papal Inventions discovered this: But the Reformation was made by casting away Human Inventions, and reducing Principles and Practices to the Rule of the Word. How little availed the free-thinking of Pagans, to rectify the prevailing false notions of a Deity, till Divine Revelation prescribed to their thoughts? And are there not multitudes of Christians, who think very justly, and practise answerably, who dare rely on the Scriptures, as the Guide and Limiter of their thoughts in matters of Religion?

From pag. 15 to pag. 25. you argue from the Absurdities of an Eye-sight Faith, that Priests are needless and dangerous Guides: And among the various and contradictory Forms of Confession made at different times, (pag. 17.) supposing one to be drawn as the Standard of Eye-sight Faith, you say, (pag. 18.) The several Propositions will be said by them to be above, but not contrary to Eye-sight; it will be esteemed esteemed dangerous trusting to carnal Eye-sight, &c.

Qu. 1. A F T E R you have told us, that so great Skill in all Arts and Sciences is necessary to enable men to understand the Scriptures; must we suppose every man as able to understand the Scripture, without the assistance of any Teachers, as they are to judge of a visible Object by their bodily Eyes?

Qu. 2. If the bodily Eyes cannot rightly discern, and judge of a proposed Object, without a proper Light or Medium, can our Reason rightly discern, and judge of supernatural Truths, without the Light of Revelation to inform it?

Qu. 3. O U G H T Persons of weak Parts, when tempted by subtil Deluders to deny the Christian Religion, so far trust to their own Understanding, as not to consult men of greater Knowledge, to try whether they can solve their Doubts, and give them Reasons sufficient to establish them in the Truth?

Qu. 4. Is it not an Advantage to mankind, that there is an Office instituted by Christ, to which none ought to be admitted without considerable Abilities to instruct men in the matters of Religion; and by which Office they are obliged statedly, as their Business, to instruct, and to render their Instructions as useful as they can to men’s practice of Godliness and Virtue; and and this in a dependance on the Divine Presence, which is promised to be with them? Or can it be just, to deny a Subsistence to such as are faithful herein?

Qu. 5. When the Persons invested in this Office are required by Christ Jesus, to put People on searching the Scriptures, and to exercise a Judgment of private Discretion, whether what they teach, require, and practise, be conformable to the Rules appointed in the Word; ought that Office to be condemned, if some Persons externally admitted to it, presume against its Prescriptions, to be Lords of Men's Faith, impose their own Dictates, or for ambitious or covetous Ends, employ their Labours to overthrow religious or civil Rights? Yea, must not such as endeavour to subvert this Office, have a malignant Design against Religion, Godliness, and Virtue? For who seeth not, that the promoting of those must be far less attended to, by Persons under no peculiar, solemn Obligation? yea, intellectual Qualifications for instructing others will be confined to a few, if not diminished in all, when none are designed for this Office; not to mention, how God may be provoked to give up a People to judicial Blindness, who shall reject so great a Benefit?

Qu. 6. Will not your Censure of Forms of Confession be accounted an Accusation fation of that commonly called the Apostle's Creed, which is a Summary of what we are to believe; and of the Decalogue, which contains the Precept, respecting most Moral Duties; and of the Lord's Prayer, which is an Abridgement of what are to pray for?

Qu. 7. When it's notorious, that there are sensible Objects too remote, or of too small a Quantity, to be seen by our Eye, and sundry things in Nature too difficult for our Understanding, (as the extent of the Divisibility of Matter, and a thousand other things;) is it a Wonder, that some Propositions of Faith should be in some respects above our Reason at present, and against our false Reasonings, though not against true Reason? Cannot my Reason be well informed, and sure that a thing exists, and know in a good Degree what that is, unless it comprehends the Manner how it is?

Qu. 8. Will it not be found too sad a Truth to jest with, that the carnal Mind discerneth not the Things of God, because they are foolishness to him, and are spiritually discerned? Do not prevailing Lusts of themselves indispose the Mind, to credit the Reality, consider the Importance, and feel the effectual Power of such Truths, as tend to imbitter Obedience, and mortify the Dominion of those Lusts, by introducing the opposite Graces and Virtues?

And
Discourse of Free-thinking. 337

And may not these Lusts also provoke God to abate assisting Helps, which conduce to enlighten the Mind? And are not those, who resolve to indulge their corrupt Hearts, very prone to embrace such false Opinions, as are necessary to quiet Con-science in their wicked Course?

You say, pag. 25, 26. Any restraint whatsoever from Reason on thinking, is absurd: No just restraint can be put to my thinking, but some Argument which shews me, it is not lawful for me to think on the Subject I propose to do: As for instance, I propose to consider, Whether the Christian Religion is founded on Divine Revelation? but am told the great Danger and Sinful-ness of thinking on that Subject, &c.

Qu. 1. Should any be branded with telling you so, who oft persuade men to examine and think of the Grounds, on which they believe, that the Christian Religion is founded on Divine Revelation; that so their Faith may be confirmed, and the In-fluence of revealed Truths be thereby the more effectual? Who are the true Protestant Divines who do otherwise, even when they warn men, that they examine these Grounds with a devout Mind, and not sceptically, or with evil Designs?

Qu. 2. Do not Christians owe that regard to what induced them upon former Enquiries to believe this, as not to doubt of it, before they meet with some good Reason, to think it is not founded on Divine Revelation?

Qu. 3. Ought we not as diligently and impartially to search for Arguments to prove this Truth, and to admit their Force as sincerely and gladly, as we do those new Arguments, which seem to disprove it? A contrary Method discovers too plainly an evil Heart of unbelief.

Qu. 4. Can you upon thinking come to a certainty, that the Christian Religion is an Imposture; unless it be upon better Evidences, than you may find of its being founded on Divine Revelation? And if you attempt this, must not you prove, either, (1st,) That God has not revealed any Religion: Or (2dly,) That he has revealed some other Religion different from the Christian; which other you are obliged to follow? If you chuse the First, must not you prove, either that God could not give any such Revelation, or that he would not, although the State of mankind rendered it so useful and necessary? But if you fix on the Second, does not your own Scheme require, that every Part of that other Religion be more agreeable to the Law of Nature, more God-like to enjoin, and that it's founded on a Divine Revelation better attested?

Qu. 5. When you enquire into Evidences, that the Christian Religion is founded on Divine Revelation; may you reject all the former External Evidences, whereby God attested those Revelations to be from him, unless you see them repeated? For instance, If God did work Miracles for the Conviction of Infidels, when he introduced the Christian Religion; and transmits a certain account to us, that such Miracles were so wrought; ought we who live in a Time when, and Place where, this Religion is become effectual and received, to deny the former Miracles to be any Testimony at all, unless God will condescend to produce the same sensible supernatural Effects of his Power in our sight? And consequently, that he must do the like from Age to Age, in the sight of every Person, who shall be obliged to entertain the Christian Religion? Upon the same Reason, must every particular Man reject all former inspired Revelation, unless he feel the same self-evidencing Testimony of God's speaking those Things to him, as the Prophets and Apostles experienced?

Qu. 6. When we find the Scripture-Revelation, explaining and requiring Obedience to all the real Precepts of the Law of Nature, and enforcing it by the most cogent Arguments, with proper Directions; and that whatsoever more is enjoined, directly tends to promote Godliness and Devotion; does it most become us, to accuse these Revelations of Imposture, because of some Difficulties therein; or from a Sense of the sublimeness of some Points, and the shortness of our Capacities, to suspend our Judgment concerning those Difficulties?
A Letter on the

You argue, pag. 27. Free-thinking is upon experience the only proper Means to destroy the Devil's Kingdom among men. And pag. 28. you add, Thus the Devil is banished entirely from the United Provinces.

Qu. 1. Does not the Devil's Kingdom consist in opposing the Gospel, hindering Reformation, promoting the dominion of Sin, the ignorance and profaneness of People, Persecution, and perverting the Minds, and turning them from Christ and his Truth, as much as it consists in Witch-craft? The Word tells us, the deluded are led captive by the Devil, and he rules in the Children of Disobedience: Or is the Devil banished, where any of these prevail?

Qu. 2. Cannot the Devil serve his Purposes in opposition to the Kingdom of Christ, by forbearing Apparitions and contracting with Witches, and the like, in a Christian Country; when he has a prospect of regaining his Empire by Infidelity and Sadducism? May not his Malice vent itself against some few ignorant wretches, by by Witchcraft, &c. in Pagan Countries, or in Places where Christianity is so strictly and generally professed, that the People are averse to speculative Infidelity, and there are few or no fit Instruments to promote it? And yet, may not he intermit such Apparitions and Witchcrafts, &c. in those Places, when he finds them more inclined to renounce Christian Principles, and that many are qualified and active to undermine the Faith of the Gospel, especially as to things unseen? Is not he, in such a case, too sagacious to confirm the staggering, and to confute his bewitched Emisaries, by such Demonstrations of the Being of Spirits, and thereby of the Truth of many other things, from the disbelief whereof he knows his Kingdom would be far more enlarged, than by his Impressions on the Bodies of some poor ignorant People?

Qu. 3. When you say, Free-thinking is upon experience the only proper Means to destroy the Devil's Kingdom; and add in Italick Letters, pag. 28. that casting him out miraculously, multiplying Priests, &c. have often increased, but never wholly destroyed his Power: Have not you Reason to fear the Power of Satan's Delusions, unless you can demonstrate the Scripture, and the most credible History, to be Forgeries? Did not Christ and his Followers miraculously cast out Devils? Did not the Gospel Gospel prevail more against Idolatry and Pagan Blindness, than all that your Heathen Free-thinkers said or wrote? nay, were not most such the greatest Supports of the Devil's Kingdom? And is it not still the common Experience, that the faithful endeavours of godly Magistrates and Ministers, and the exemplary Lives of Christians, conduce more to the Destruction of the Devil's Kingdom in the Hearts and Lives of People, than all that Free-thinking, which ever was, or still is, employed in undermining the Foundations of the Christian Religion? And is any man so blind, (if not infatuated,) as not to foresee, that if Christianity were overcome, the Authority as well as the Power of the Devil must be acknowledged by all Nations, and Heathenism prove a thicker Darkness than Popery itself? (though you say otherwise, pag. 28.) But blessed be God, such as obey the Gospel are sure, that true Christianity shall in due time triumph over both, and their respective Supporters too.

You say, pag. 33, 34. If the surest and best Means of arriving at Truth, lies in Free-thinking, then the whole Duty of Man with respect to Opinions, lies only in Free-thinking; because he who thinks freely, does his best towards being in the right, and consequently does all that God, who can require
Discourse of Free-thinking.

require no more of any Man than that he should do his best, can require of him; and should he prove mistaken in any Opinions, he must be as acceptable to God, as if he received none but right Opinions.

Qu. 1. Can God require no more, and can Man do no more towards being in the right in his Opinions in the matters of Religion, than to think freely? May not God require Prayer, for his Assistance to discern the Truth? May not he require us to call upon him, to give us Faith to receive the Truth? May not he require a humble Reverence, a Love to Truth, an honest Purpose to obey it, an Abstinence from what provokes God to with-hold his help from us, and his restraints on Satan? May not he require us, to mortify those Lusts, which blind and prejudice the Mind, and faithfully to practise what we already know? Is God unjust or impotent, in requiring such things with our Free-thinking? Or cannot Man do these, as well as think freely? The Light of Nature must allow, if not enjoin, Things which have in them such a tendency to thinking freely with good Success.

Qu. 2. If a Man by a neglect of those Things, receive such false Opinions, as the Scripture calls damnable Heresies, and Errors whereby Men make Shipwreck of Faith, can you think, that Man is as acceptable:
able to God by an Opinion that is so contrary to Divine Revelations, as by an Opinion which is according to them? Is a God of Truth so indifferent to Truth and Error, that when he has given forth his Revelations, it's alike to him, whether Men believe them or not? Is it no matter, if their Opinions allow them to blaspheme his Son, ridicule his Spirit, deny the Resurrection, make a Jest of the Corruption of Human Nature and Hell-Torments, &c? Would God be no more pleased with them, if they conceived honourable Thoughts of his Son and Spirit, and just Notions of every revealed Doctrine? By what Rule do you put God under a Necessity to accept alike, where there is so great a contrariety, as receiving important Truths, and important Falshoods? Are such Men alike to you, or to any Man of Sense.

Qu. 3. WILL it not follow, that your Free-thinkers are as acceptable to God, when they act conjointly to their erroneous Opinions, as those Believers who act according to the true Principles of Religion? Saint Paul was once such a Free-thinker; for he verily thought within himself, he ought to do many things contrary to the Name of Jesus of Nazareth: But did not he afterwards account himself the chief of Sinners, for having done such Things? or did his Ignorance excuse him from standing in need of

of pardoning Mercy, and thinking himself unworthy to be called an Apostle?

Qu. 4. Did not many whom you applaud as Free-thinkers, entertain such Opinions as directed them to practise what the Holy God must abhor? Some ascribed all to Chance, and hence despised all religious Worship, all dependance on God, and Thanksgivings to him for benefits. Others received unworthy Notions of God, and thence utter'd the most horrid Blasphemies; not to mention the Idolatry, Self-murder, &c. warranted by the Opinions embraced by others.

From pag. 35. to pag. 40. Superstition is treated of as a great Evil; and your Censure is just, as to Pagan Fooleries, and Papal Additions to the Rules prescribed by Christ for Worship, &c. nor can it be denied, that groundless Scruples and Fears among Christians are blameable. But the Point is carried far beyond these in sundry Passages. For, pag. 38, 39. you say, The Superstitious make God talk to all Mankind from Corners, and consequently require things of Men under the [Sanction or] Penalty of Misery in the next World, of which they are incapable of having any convincing Evidence that they come from him. They make him (who equally beholds all the Dwellers upon Earth,) to have favourite Nations and People, without any consideration deration of Merit. They make him put other Nations under disadvantages without any demerit, &c. These Men have no quiet in their own Minds; they rove about in search of saving Truth, &c. and neglecting what God speaks plainly to the whole World, take up with what they suppose he has communicated to a few; and thereby believe and practise such things, in which they can never have Satisfaction.

Qu. 1. DOES God's equally beholding all the Dwellers upon Earth, prove, that God may not exert his Sovereignty, in favouring some Nations above others? He who does so in external Advantages, is not confined from giving greater helps for Salvation to some than others. Is not his giving some Men stronger Faculties, to judge of what God speaks to all mankind in order to future Happiness, some help towards obtaining that Happiness, which they of duller understandings have not?

Qu. 2. IF the Gospel is an Advantage in order to Salvation, as it contributes to our fuller Knowledge of God and his Will, and gives the strongest Motives, and best Directions to render Men obedient; what Merit can any plead for obtaining it, or what freedom from Demerit could be pretended, when all Nations (except the Jews, and they oft,) were for many Ages impious and idolatrous? But if the Light of Nature is sufficient, where, where, or when did God deprive them of it?

Qu. 3. Ought the Testimony of Isaiah, (whom you commend as a Free-thinker,) be received? He afferts, In the Isa. ii. last Days, the Mountain of the Lord's House shall be established on the Top of the Mountains, and all Nations shall flow unto it; and many People shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the Mountain of the Lord's House, and he will teach us of his Ways, and we will walk in his Paths: For out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Was not Jerusalem a Corner, which long enjoyed the means of knowing these Ways of the Lord above other Places? And were not the Nations under disadvantage, 'till they came to know where to find those means, and were made Partakers of them as received from Jerusalem? Or did God put them under that disadvantage before, by giving some better helps to others, when he left to them what they were possesed of, and what you judge sufficient?

Qu. 4. What Things does God speak plainly to the whole World, which sincere Christians neglect? Are there any Duties evidently required by the Law of Nature, which the Christian Religion confirms not? or does the Christian tian Law allow any thing, which the Law of Nature forbids?

Qu. 5. Does not God speak as evidently to Christians, by his revealed Word annexed to the Law of Nature; as he speaks to other Nations by the Law of Nature alone? And had not the Pagans as different Apprehensions, about what the Law of Nature required, discovered, and directed; as Christians have about their Rule? and far more and greater, than Christians have concerning what the Law of Nature requires and dictates? Your Free-thinker Varro will tell you the many contrary Opinions, which the Heathens received concerning God.

Qu. 6. Is it unjust or impossible for God to reveal some Truths, and enjoin some positive Precepts, besides those which he signified by the Light of Nature? How is he obliged to give no further Discoveries of himself and his Purposes? Why must he give no further Directions concerning his Worship? Why may he not promise, and more explicitly manifest, what Rewards he will confer on the Righteous, than the Light of Nature declares and assures Men of? Or why can he not further represent, what Sorts and Degrees of Punishment he will judge proportioned to the Aggravations of Men's Crimes? For herein you know the wicked are so favourable

vourable to themselves, as to be unapt to infer them from the Law of Nature.

Qu. 7. WILL not your own Notions of the goodness of God, incline you to think him concerned to instruct and reform Mankind? And will it not follow, that he would reveal such things as before mentioned, when for many Ages the Light of Nature was ineffectual to deliver the World from their Blindness, Idolatries, Irreligion, Carnality, Barbarities, and neglects of the Labour necessary to know their Duty, and to be convinced of their Sins? He knew also their violent Propensions and Temptations to all those Sins, as well as their Aversion and Impediments to the Exercise of Virtue, and much more of Godliness.

Qu. 8. WHEN the Nations (not excepting Greece,) were so universally ignorant of God, and his Worship, and a future State of Retribution, notwithstanding what you term his plain speaking to the World; Is it not more probable, that those few among the Heathens who arrived to any jufter Notions of such things, derived them either mediately from some Divine Revelations given to others, (as Bochart and others collect,) or from immediate Inspirations communicated to them, for their own and others Benefit; than that they acquired them only from their own Attention to natural Light?

Qu. 9.
Qu. 9. Can you expect to be believed by any understanding serious Christians, that they are incapable of having any convincing Evidence, that the Revelations on which their Religion is founded are from God? If then they are convinced of this, all of them must therefore be reproached as Fools, who admit Convictions without the Evidence, which every wise Man would require? But what if they cannot inform you, how far their inward Disposition, and Divine Illumination, contribute a convincing Force to that Evidence, which does not persuade such as are Strangers thereto? Yet they can declare to you the Reasons, why they think so well of the Evidence, as to wonder how any are capable of rejecting that Degree of it, which may be known by every honest Enquirer.

Can they resist Conviction that the Gospel is of God, which has such a Testimony, that none but the true God can give; a Gospel in it self so Divine, and subservient and effectual to holy Purposes, that none but God could dictate; and so far from contradicting his Law of Nature, that it explaineth, confirmeth, and inforceth Man's observance of it? Can a Gospel thus glorious be hid to them; when it shines into them with a Light resistible by none, whose Minds are not blinded by the God of this World? For,
To them it's evident, that to the Lord Jesus Christ agree all the Characters, by which God described the Messiah to his Prophets in all the former Ages of the World: And in him were answered all the Types, which God had instituted to prefigure him. God oft acknowledged him by his Angels; he attested his Authority and Mission, at his Baptism, and at other times, by a Voice from Heaven. What greater Testimony could be given, than by his raising him from the Dead, after the great Things that attended his Death, and the Miracles which he performed in his Life in Attestation of his Holy Doctrine? Our Lord was unspotted in his Life; the Miracles he performed were real, in open View, for the good of Men, and declared by him before-hand, as what he would work to prove, that he came from God, and to which he appealed. He prophesied of his own Death, with the Manner of it; he foretold his Resurrection, the ruin of the Temple, the success of his Gospel by improbable Instruments, the Conversion of the Gentiles against the great Power, Learning, and all the established Customs and Prejudices which obstructed it. He promised to send the Holy Ghost to his Apostles, with Power to give him to others, and to work Miracles in his Name: And this Power of Miracles remained some Hundreds of Years in the Church.
Church so evidently, that Tertullian and others appeal to their Enemies of greatest Power, for the Truth and Trial thereof. —These amazing things were foretold by him, to be wrought as the Effects of his Resurrection: The Spirit of Prophecy was also in many of his Followers, and declared to be the Testimony of the blessed Jesus.—And may not these now be esteemed (though a small Part of what might be mentioned,) some External Evidence, that our Religion, which Christ and his Servants published, is founded on a Revelation which is Divine?

2. We have further grounds to believe, because these are contained in the Scriptures as the Testimony of Christ’s inspired Disciples, who are most credible Witnesses as to Matters of Fact: For they could not be deceived themselves; and were mean Men, who could have no View to serve any secular Interest; and Men, who if they believed what Christ or themselves had said, they could expect nothing but eternal Misery if they deceived others, and in this World the greatest Sufferings if they published them as Truths: In a word, they were Men, who did seal those Truths with their Blood, some in Jerusalem and Jewry, the Places where, and at the very Time when, these things were acted; not to mention the great Number of other Martyrs in that Age. Need it be added, that these Matters of Fact are conveyed down by many other ways with more Advantages, to assure us of their certainty, than any other History can pretend to?

3. The Miracles, &c. thus recorded are the least exceptionable, because they attest as Rules of Practice, the improved Law of Nature, and no positive Duties or Institutions, but what are exactly suited to our Estate as remediable, and which God has promised to bless. Moreover, as to the attested Articles of Faith, most of them are self-evident Truths; none of them impossible to be true; the most speculative are useful to practice, and so far intelligible; and as far as any part of any of them is incomprehensible, God does not require us to understand that.

4. We think, that the Attestations being thus solemn, and the Matters attested of such Importance to future Ages, it would be the Concern of Providence, to have them transmitted secure against all Attempts, to render them insufficient, or unfit to answer the saving Designs of those Revelations.

5. But you may also meet with many Christians, who will tell you, they are capable of discerning in these Scriptures (now in our hands) intrinsick Evidences of their being Divine; and that they are thereby convinced, the Christian Religion is founded on Divine Revelation. They see the Truth of many Prophecies and Promises, by their accomplishment. They behold the godlike Design, Purity, Spirituality, Power and Tendency of the several Parts, (as well as the Harmony of the Whole,) to sanctify Persons in their inward Dispositions, and regulate their Behaviour towards God, and other Men, and themselves. And they find, that as they advance in a divine Life, they have more reason to approve, admire, and relish those Truths, as agreeable to the Nature of that Life, and as much conducive to its Perfection, as they felt them to be at first to their Conversion from Sin to God.

6. They can also plead, if it were requisite, that it is against all common Sense, that the Scriptures could be corrupted in things of moment; because their Copies were soon scattered far and near, and carefully watched and examined by Jews and Gentiles, Friends and Enemies, Orthodox and Heterodox; and also still preserved by the Church, as its great Charter, Rule, and Treasure.

Qu. 10. Are you well acquainted with true Christians, if you can think, that by taking up with Scripture Revelations, they believe and practice such things in which they can never have Satisfaction? If you had said, they could not come to a Satisfaction about what they believed and practiced,
Discourse of Free-thinking.

tised, without this Revelation, or against it, they would assent to it. But as they cannot take up with this Revelation, if they neglect what God speaks plainly to the whole World; because the Scripture containeth the Law of Nature more explicitly and fully than it's any where else recorded: So they give the most certain Evidence the Matter is capable of, that they are arrived at full Satisfaction in what they believe and practise according to Scripture Rules; for they deny themselves, mortify their Lusts, sacrifice their Estates, Places, Honour and Lives, in Obedience to the Precepts of the Word; and as far as they are diligent to walk by this Light, they live and die in a true Peace and Joy, founded on the satisfying Evidence they have of the Certainty of the Gospel-Revelation: And such of them as want this Peace, will inform you, that their uneasiness proceeds from the defects of their Obedience to the Gospel, and not from a Suspicion that the Gospel is not true.

Qu. 11. May not such Truths be justly called saving Truths, and not Trifles, to the Belief and Practice whereof God promiseth Salvation; and threatens to damn such, as disbelieve and disobey those Truths?

Qu. 12. Must not such as live under the Gospel, be in greater Danger of falling ing under that damning Sentence, for rejecting those Truths; than such as never heard the Word?
A Letter on the

Qu. 13. Is it Wisdom to banter such saving Truths, and their Sanction, unless Men can infallibly prove, that it's impossible, that those should be Truths, and that God has so threatened the Rejecters of them? A Task too hard for the boldest Wit, though he could offer some Exceptions to God's threatening to damn Men, for not believing some more doubtful, and less important Truths.

You add, pag. 37. "Happy is the "Man, (says the divine Virgil,) who has "discovered the Causes of Things, and is "thereby cured of all kind of Fears, even "of Death itself, and all the noise and "din of Hell." For by Free-thinking alone Men are capable of knowing, that a perfectly Good, Just, Wise, and powerful Being, made and governs the World; and from this Principle they know, that he can require nothing of Men in any Country or Condition of Life, but that whereof he has given them an opportunity of being convinced by Evidence and Reason in that Place, &c. And, that an honest and rational Man can have no just Reason to fear any thing from him.

Not to enquire, how the divine Virgil shews himself so well acquainted with God,
Discourse of Free-thinking.

God, the universal Cause, as to direct Men, how to be cured (rightly) of all Fears, even of Death, and all the noise and din of Hell? Nor to ask, why Streptitus is rendered noise and din too? I ask,

Qn. 1. How few Nations, either now have not, or once had an opportunity to know the Gospel; and of being acquainted by degrees with the Evidence that it is from God? And if they add a wilful neglect of this opportunity; to their Idolatry, and wicked Courses against the Light they have; must God act against his own Nature, if he give them not the same degree of Evidence as to others? But our concern is not, to penetrate into God's Transactions with Heathens, (which are more secret;) though certainly even they are such, as become God, and will be vindicated by him: We ought to be solicitous about the Rule, by which God will judge us, who enjoy the Gospel.

Qn. 2. May not God require of Men living in a Christian Country, that they believe and obey the Gospel, upon the Evidence he has given of the Truth of the Gospel? And if such know God to be a just Governor, must not they expect he'll punish their Neglects and Contempts? But of this else-where.

Qn. 3. Has not every Law of God, published to Men in a State of Trial, a penal Sanction? Can you suppose God so uncon-
A Letter on the

unconcerned whether his Laws be observed, that the Transgressors even of the Law of Nature are obnoxious to no Punishment?

Q. 4. Is, it Superstition for a guilty Sinner to be afraid of the threatened Punishment, when conscious of his Fault and Danger? It's the Office of Conscience to charge Guilt, and put him to fear: And when it does so, rational Self-Love will prompt him to exercise that fear, which is implanted in his Nature, as a means of his governableness and safety. Will it not follow hence, that the Law of Nature may be transgressed with Impunity; or, that such Free-thinkers encourage Stupid Security, that so they may ridicule Hell-Torments upon the Authority of Pagan Authors, while they call true Religion by the Name of Superstition, which most of them distinguished?

Qu. 5. When you say, that an honest and rational Man has no just Reason to fear anything from God, can you suppose this very Man innocent from all Transgressions of the Law of Nature? Has not he offended in many Things against that Rule; yea, does not he continue to do so in many Instances?

Qu. 6. Is he a rational Man, who must own he has sinned, and that God is a holy, wise, and just Governour; and yet can be confident he is safe, though he has

has no good Evidence, that God will not punish him?

Qu. 7. WHAT certain Evidence can any who reject the Gospel have, that God will not punish them for the Sins they committed against the Law of Nature; yea against the most extensive Explications of the Precepts of that Law, which they may find in the Gospel; yea, and for disobeying the Gospel?

Qu. 8. If Men conclude themselves safe, because they sin from a fatal Necessity, would not that be to deny themselves to be Subjects of Moral Government, although they profess to own God to be their Governour? Or is it good Reasoning, that because God forbears for some time to punish them, that therefore he will never punish them? or to infer Impunity hereafter, because they receive some common Benefits at present? Or can they collect a certain Evidence of Impunity, from what God is at free Liberty to do or not do? This is no other, than to be certain of obtaining that, which God as an arbitrary Agent may withhold, as well as grant.

Qu. 9. From which of the Perfections of the true God, who is supreme Governour, can the Rejecters of the Gospel come to a Certainty, that God will not punish their Sins against the Law of Nature?—Can they argue it from his Holiness?
A Letter on the

ness? when as a Holy God, he must hate Sin, as it's repugnant to his Nature, and therefore an Evil too great not to deserve Punishment.—If they infer it from his Justice; will not this adjudge the Sinner to bear the Punishment which he deserves?
—If they infer it from his Wisdom, they must conclude, that God will deal with Transgressors, as if he made a light Matter of their Affronts, obstructed their Obedience, encouraged their Rebellion, and tempted them to despise both him, and his Laws.—Or can Sinners found any certain expectations of Impunity, upon the Goodness of God? He is good, but can they think that to be the Goodness of a God, which would incline him who is Gover-nour of the World, to grant an Impunity, that must reflect on his Holiness, Justice and Wisdom; that must prostitute the Honour of his Government, and frustrate the Ends of it, by giving the rest of Mankind occasion to think, they incur no future Danger by Disobedience? Moreover we see, that notwithstanding the Goodness of God, he inflicts so many Punishments on some Sinners at present, as may give others (yea, and these if unreformed,) ground to expect a future Vengeance.

Qu. 10. Should Sinners plead as a further Support to their Hopes, that Mankind is by Nature habitually corrupt and prone to Sin, and averse to Obedience; would not this be to expect Impunity, by impeaching God as unholy, or weak; in that he formed the root of Mankind with such irregular and impure Inclinations, and that without any demerit on Man's part? A Charge far more reflecting on God, than it can be to affirm, that Adam's Apostacy was the Origin of this Disorder in his Posterity. I need not insinuate, that if the depravedness of Human Nature were granted to be this Way derived, Free-thinkers would find more rational and certain Evidence for most of the Principles of revealed Religion, than they can find for the Impunity of a Sinner who rejects the Gospel; or for his being justly fearless of the Punishments, to which he is obnoxious for violating any of the Laws of Nature?

Qu. 11. If any Man who rejects the Gospel pretend to Innocency, must not he be unacquainted with himself, and with the Law of Nature; or else accuse the Law of Nature to be very imperfect, as not forbidding all Evil in Heart and Life, nor commanding all that's Good, and fit to be obtain'd and done by men? But men will find God's Laws to bear the impress of his Nature, and not to be variable, or to be measure d by men's ignorance, lusts, or fancies.

Qu. 12. The Gospel indeed gives a satisfactory Account, how a penitent Believer

liever may be certain, that he shall escape all destructive Punishments, though he has oft transgressed the Law of Nature: For it contains a Promise of Pardon to such, upon a Satisfaction made by Christ, which subserves and secures the Ends of God's Government, and represents the Glory and Harmony of the Divine Perfections. But what Interest in this can any Rejecters of the Gospel expect? seeing they tread under foot the Blood of the Redeemer as a profane Thing, and are condemned by the Gospel Law, as well as by the Law of Nature.

Furthe you say, pag. 37, 38. That God being incapable of having any Addition made to his Power or Happiness, and wanting nothing, can require nothing of Men for his own sake, but only for Man's sake; and consequently, that all Actions and Speculations, which are of no use to Mankind, [as singing or dancing, eating or drinking, &c. (in which the greatest part of the Heathen Worship consisted,) or the Belief of Transubstantiation or Consubstantiation, or of any Doctrines not taught by the Church of England,] either signify nothing at all with God, or else displease him, but can never render a Man more acceptable to him.

Qu. 1. Though God can require nothing of men for his own sake, to make him

him more powerful or happy; does it follow, that he can require nothing of men, in Acknowledgement of his Dominion and Perfections, and of their Dependance on him? One you call a Free-thinker, faith, God made all Things for himself; and must Prov. xvi. he require nothing from man, with an intent of receiving any Homage of Praise or Service from him? He has wise and good Purposes to serve by men in this world, which tend to his Honour; and may he not command men to subserve such Purposes? Is it not rational, that we do all Things to the Glory of the Author of our Being, and of all Benefits? and must it be against Reason, to design his Glory in any Thing we do?

Qu. 2. Cannot God for the sake of mankind require some things, which men think not to be for their Good? Vast Nations have long thought many things required by the Law of Nature, to be unprofitable and hurtful to mankind. And are not men capable of wanting some things to make them happy, which are more and greater than those of which they are at present sensible? Or can men understand by the Light of Nature, all that is necessary to their Improvement and Felicity in both Worlds, and what's conducive thereto, as fully as God knows these?

Qu. 3. Is it not more rational to judge, that whatever God requires of men, is some some way or other useful to them; than that God cannot require that Thing, which they know not the way how it becomes useful?

Qu. 4. Cannot God require of men some things, as subservient to his Glory, or as means by which he will communicate his Blessings, which seem useless to some men? To instance, singing his Praises, hearing his Word, &c. Nay, what if he makes choice of what appears contemptible to some Persons, that he may the more manifest his own Power, hide Pride from man, convince us of our Dependance on him, and that his Prerogative and Authority are not to be limited by his Creatures?

Qu. 5. Cannot God by his Institution and promised Blessing, make such Things useful to men, which in their own Nature, and to the Eye of Sense, appear insufficient for that Purpose? If he command us to eat and drink at the Lord's Table, in Commemoration of his Death; and promiseth us in so doing, Communion with him, and Improvement of Grace and Comfort; what Evidence have you, that our eating and drinking as he appoints us, shall not be useful to such Ends? Even Naaman's bodily Cure was effected, by what he thought impossible to effect it.

Qu. 6. Have we any Reason to judge, that they who in Obedience to God, and Faith
Discourse of Free-thinking.

Faith in his Promise, observe the meanest of his Institutions, do not please God, and may not expect the Benefits promised by him? Or is it the best way to please him, and obtain those Benefits, to neglect his Institutions, and contemn them, as useless to Men, and unfit for God to appoint?

Qv. 7. Will those humble devout Christians, who attend the Ordinances of God's external Worship in the manner he prescribes, and who experience the Aptitude as well as Benefit of them, be persuaded, that they are either useless to them, or no Part of their Homage to God, or of that Profession which he exacts from his Followers? Sacraments are in their account of great use, as distinguishing Badges, and assuring Seals; and every one who believes that Christ died a Sacrifice for our Sins, can discern the aptitude of the external Representation of his Death by the Lord's Supper, to excite their Graces and holy Affections.

Qv. 8. Must all these Truths you call Speculations, (as well as Actions,) be useless to mankind, because they are so to some men? May not men of equal Honesty, Diligence and Understanding, as confidently affirm what they know and experience? They see, how those speculative Doctrines direct and influence them in Acts of internal Worship, and contribute to a Christian Life. Nor is it accountable, how they and others so differ about about the usefulness of such Speculations: For they believe them, others believe them not: They reverence Gospel-Revelations, others seem to despise them: They pray for the teachings of the Spirit, others ridicule them: They take the Word of God for the Rule by which they judge of Truths, especially such as could not be discovered but by Revelation; others make their own Reason (though refusing the Light of the Word,) to be the Rule by which they judge of such Truths: They exercise themselves in what both the Christian and Natural Religion require; others confine themselves to Natural Religion only, (if they exercise any part of it:) They are content to know as much, and as far, as they are capable of knowing; others reject the whole Gospel, because their finite Minds are incapable to comprehend all that belongs to the sublimest Doctrines: They apply what they know of all Doctrines of Faith to practical Purposes; others look at them as empty and false Speculations.

Qu. 9. Do you act sincerely, when you say, The belief of any Doctrine not taught by the Church of England, signifies nothing with God, &c? Do you mean by this Exception, that the belief of all the Doctrines taught by the Church of England, does signify something with God, to render us acceptable to him? If so, our belief lie of the sacred Trinity, and of all the Fundamentals of the Christian Faith, is of great use to render us acceptable to God. But when this is so directly contradicted by many Passages in your Book, it must pass for a Banter, or a Blind.

You tell us after this, pag. 38. By means of all this, a Man may possess his Soul in peace, as having an expectation of enjoying all the good things which God can beflow, and no fear of any future Misery or Evil from his hands; and the very worst of his State can only be, that he is pleasantly deceived.

Qu. 1. Can what you refer to by all this, be a just Ground of this peace and expectation? What if Men neglect to use the Opportunities they have to be convinced of what God requires? Or what if they also omit and refuse to perform, what they are convinced God does require of them, and do what's contrary? Are not both too common? And yet such as you call happy, may be guilty of all these.

Qu. 2. Or if you mean, that an honest rational Man may by means of all this, be possessed of this peace; ought you not to express that, and describe what you intend by an honest rational Man? For if your rational Man is no more, than one capable of knowing and judging of the Truth of Propositions, and arguing thereon; surely such a Man with a wicked Heart
A Letter on the Heart and Life can have no true Peace now, nor justly expect those good Things. Or if by honest Man, you intend no more than one just to Men; may not such a Man notwithstanding his Justice to Men, be unjust to God? And if so, hath he a right to such peace and expectations?

Qu. 3. Is it an easy Thing for honest rational Men, if sober and of tender Consciences, who live under the Gospel, so to resist the Evidences of its Truth, and be so certain of its being a Forgery, as always to enjoy inward Peace? Will no Fears disturb them, upon reviews of that Infidelity, Contempt, and Omissions, against which that Gospel denounceth the Wrath of God, and eternal Damnation?

Qu. 4. Upon what Evidence exclusive of Divine Revelation, can any Man expect to enjoy all the good things, which God can give?—A Believer has sufficient notice in the Gospel of a real Happiness in both Worlds, and he hath God's Promise upon which to ground his Expectation; and yet he must think less will make him happy, than all the good things which an Infinite God can bestow.—But where in the Book of Nature is this large Charter to be found? Many of your commended Free-thinkers deny the Immortality of the Soul: Such find no ground by the Light of Nature to expect many good Things after Death, or that God can give them Immortality.
Immortality. Others of them speak of a future State with the greatest Uncertainty. But did any ever pretend, that God in the Law of Nature gave any Promise specifying the Kind, and Degree, of what good things he would give? Or can his Justice or Goodness be accused, if he is so arbitrary as not to give all that he can bestow, when he gave them no ground for such undue expectations?

Qu. 5. Is a future State so uncertain, that to persuade Men to use your prescribed Means against Superstition and fears of the din of Hell, you use these words as an Argument, viz. The very worst of his State can only be, that he is pleasantly deceived? Many Heathens, besides Socrates, and Cicero, seem more assured of a Life of Retribution, from the present methods of Providence. But is it not strange, that if God as a Governour speaks so plainly to all the World all that’s necessary to be obeyed, all the Free-thinkers should not more certainly know, what is so necessary to restrain men’s Disobedience to God’s Laws, and to incline men to keep them? But if the Light of Nature had not so plainly expressed this, which is the aptest means to enforce God’s Laws, they may find he has revealed it by his Word so fully, as may affect and terrify a very Infidel. And the Obscurity of the Light of Nature in so important a Matter, ought to make Divine Revelation...
Letter on the Revelation acceptable to all, who mind their own Happiness.

Qu. 6. But if he who rejects the Gospel, should find himself deceived in his Opinions and Actions, will not his being pleasantly deceived soon appear to be indeed the very worst of his State? For whereas a godly Fear and Concern had contributed to his Safety, his pleasant Dreams of Safety in his irreligious Course harden him against Divine Warnings: His delightful Expectation of all good things, fixeth him in a blind Security, and emboldens him in his Infidelity, in his Scoffs at revealed Religion, and in neglects of the Duties thereby required. As such Things expose him to the severer Punishments hereafter, so his pleasantnes in committing them maketh his State in this World next to desperate, as to any hopes of his Recovery.

You say, pag. 40. The infinite numbers of Pretenders in all Ages to Revelations from Heaven, supported by Miracles, &c. make thinking necessary, &c.

Qu. 1. Must no holy Prophets and Apostles have received true Revelations from God, because Deluders have falsely pretended to Revelations?

Qu. 2. When God had given such Revelations of himself and his Will, as he declares to be a sufficient Rule, is there the same Reason to question the Truth of these;
these; as of after-Revelations pretending to make a new Canon for Faith, Worship, and the Terms of Salvation?

I am glad to find among the Errata the following Clause, viz. dele, If a Man be under an Obligation to listen to any Revelation at all. If this Sentence had come into the Book, as the Author's deliberate Thought; I would ask, whether Man is under any Obligation to listen to the Law of Nature? For that's a Revelation of God's Will, as well as inspired Revelation: So it is, tho' Custom lead us to speak of the Law of Nature, as contradistinguished from Revelation. But this acknowledged Erratum (if honestly done) will give us ground to say, that you grant Man is under an Obligation to listen to some Revelation in some degree.

Again, you tell us, pag. 44. The Design of the Gospel was, to set all Men upon Free-thinking, &c. St. Paul offers many Arguments, for the Confirmation of Christians in the true Faith; whereby he made them, and all his Readers for ever, Judges of their Force; for whoever reasoneth, lays aside all Authority, &c. Our Saviour commands us to search the Scriptures.

Qu. 1. Because Free-thinking is allow'd by the Gospel, to find out the Truth, and establish us in the Truth; may we therefore sceptically employ our Free-thinking,
A Letter on the

ing, altogether to search for pretences to reject the Gospel, after we have received it upon Evidence?

Qu. 2. Because St. Paul sometimes offers Arguments besides his Authority, to confirm Men in the true Faith; has he made all his Readers for ever judges, whether what he delivered from God as an inspired Apostle, shall have any Authority, or serve as an Argument of any force, to determine their Judgment?

Qu. 3. Because our Saviour commands Men to search the Scriptures, which testified of him; and forbids them blindly to resign their Consciences to the Dictates of any fallible Persons; does it follow, that Christ forbids us to resign our Judgment, to what God speaks by infallible inspired Persons, and contained in the Scriptures as the Rule of Faith, as far as they are rightly explained? Had Christ favoured such a Conclusion, the Command had contradicted his Purpose, which was to put them on searching the Scriptures, as containing infallible Truths.

You add, pag. 46. The Conduct of the Priests, who are the chief Pretenders to be Guides to others in matters of Religion, makes Free-thinking unavoidable: And to prove this, I will give you an Induction of several Particulars of their Conduct. And then from pag. 47, to pag. 76, the Divisions
Discourse of Free-thinking.

Discourse of Free-thinking. 373

isions among English Priests, (as you call them,) about the Nature and Attributes of God, and the Authority and Sense of Scriptures, are mentioned.

Having still owned, that Free-thinking rightly managed is lawful, and a Duty, I shall suggest some Queries.

Qu. 1. Are not more and greater Divisions among the Heathen Free-thinkers concerning God, and his Attributes? Yea, from them many Heresies came into the Christian Church.

Qu. 2. Is it not as just to reflect on the Light of Nature, or Reason, on account of such Divisions among the Heathen Philosophers, as to reflect on the Scriptures, because of these Divisions among Christian Ministers?

Qu. 3. Yea, would not such Reflections on the Light of Nature be more just? considering you tell us, that God speaks by that so plainly; whereas Christians own, that their Religion is in some Things mysterious.

Qu. 4. Is not your bold unlimited way of Free-thinking, the very Cause of the obnoxious Passages, which express the Sentiments of some of our divided Priests? For they had written and judged with more Sobriety, if their Minds had been restrained by the fear of God, and a due Veneration for his Word. But they ran into Excesses by indulging a profane Wit,
A Letter on the vain Itch of Novelties, an irregular Fancy, and an Ambition to say something more than others.

Qu. 5. If Priests are generally as bad Men as you represent them, is it any wonder some of them give you such a handle for Triumph? But might you not with equal Justice, expose revealed Religion by what Heathen Enemies have written against it, as by what any such Protestant Priests utter; who appear as much Atheists and Deists as any others, and with whom the Scriptures are but an idle Tale?

Qu. 6. Is it impossible, yea or improbable, that some Truths improving of our Knowledge of God, and his Attributes, must have remained Secrets as to us, unless God had revealed them; and is not the Knowledge of such Truths an Advantage? You had been more ignorant, had there never been any Divine Revelation.

Qu. 7. May not these Truths when revealed, be committed to writing; and the Book containing them be called the Scriptures of Truth?

Qu. 8. Had Christians come to the Notice of such Truths by unwritten Tradition, would not their Divisions be much greater; when they are so great notwithstanding they enjoy the Scriptures?

Qu. 9. Must not these Scriptures have a true certain fixed Sense, though Men Men differ ever so much concerning that Sense? If it be not so, why do you assert Free-thinking, that you may find out the meaning of the Scriptures?

Qu. 10. Must not this proper Sense and Meaning of the Scriptures, be infallible Truth, though many wrest the Scriptures to their own Destruction, and the Disturbance of others?

Qu. 11. If some Men think freely about the meaning of the Scriptures, and yet mistake the true meaning of them, and fix on a false Sense; is not that a false Opinion and Error? If it be not so, all who think freely must be of one and the same true Opinion, though ever so contradictory to each other.

Qu. 12. If the Errors which a Man falls into upon his presumptuous Free-thinking, be such as determine him to neglect or act contrary to any Duty, essential to happiness by the Divine Constitution; may not that be called a damning Error?

Qu. 13. If some upon that Free-thinking, which becomes Men sincerely solicitous to know the Mind of God, and devoutly supplicating his Assistance in their searches into the Scriptures, do attain the true Sense of them as to some Points; may not they be assured, that they so far have arrived at the Knowledge of infallible Truths, notwithstanding the different Sentiments of others?
Qu. 14. Are not upright Christians, who believe that the true Sense of the Scriptures is the chief and proper Rule, by which they are to judge, what they are to believe concerning God and his Will, especially about the Salvation of Sinners; in a more likely way to adjust their different Sentiments, than by fixing on natural Light or human Reason, as the chief Rule or Judge of their Faith concerning God, and the Salvation of Sinners?—This appears so, because the Sense of Scripture is so plain as to many Truths, that the opposite Errors are confuted at first View; and wherein it appears more doubtful, yet when Arguments are drawn from the Word, as the agreed Rule, the extravagancies of the Mind are much restrained, and those Arguments from the Divine Authority of that Rule are apt to convince, as far as the deduced Consequences are gradually brought up to what is plainly expressed therein.

Qu. 15. Can any who believe the Scriptures to be divinely revealed, admit that natural Light and human Reason are the proper and chief Rule and Judge, by which the Differences about all the great Doctrines of the Gospel are to be decided? Some who acknowledge no higher a Rule than natural Reason, may profanely put an end to Dissention about those Truths, by condemning all of them as Trifles Trifles and silly Fancies: But this Rule is unfit and insufficient, to adjust Debates of this kind to the Satisfaction of the Minds of real Christians; for they are convinced, that the Manifestations of God as the Saviour of Sinners by Christ, and his Will about their Salvation, transcend human Reason; and that it was not by the Light of Nature, that God revealed these Doctrines.

The Redemption of Sinners contains such Miracles of Wisdom, Mercy, and Power, as human Reason could not invent; nor could Reason not informed by Revelation, infer them from the Nature of God, or his Works, or from what he had written on the Hearts of Men. Nor yet are all of them, any of those self-evident Truths, which Reason without the help of Revelation can discern, and must approve at first View.

To set up natural Reason as the chief Rule by which all those Doctrines must be judged, seems to be an Affront to God; as if he had display'd his Perfections to the utmost in the Works of Nature, and had no more of his Will to make known, than he signified by the Light of Nature; to which also he must be confined, as the only way by which Himself or Mind must be revealed, however the Condition of Mankind is changed.

To infer the falsity of any revealed Article
A Letter on the Article of Faith, because it cannot be proved by natural Reason, is to subject a Divine Testimony to our human Understanding, which is not only fallible, but apt to mistake through Ignorance of Matters above its proper Sphere. Moreover, to take natural Reason for the chief Rule, as to Matters of Gospel Doctrines, is inconsistent with believing the Scriptures to be a Divine Revelation; because these assert, that they are the Rule in those Matters, and are sufficient to be so. Yea, is it not a Contradiction? For as a Faith founded on Human Reason, (if it were Faith,) is not a Divine Faith; because a Divine Faith is founded on God’s Testimony contained in the Scriptures: When therefore I do believe any particular Truth, because it is affirmed in the Scriptures, and yet appeal to natural Reason as the Rule by which I must judge whether it be true or false; is not this believing the Scriptures, and not believing them? Yea, is it not excluding Faith, and pleading for Science in the place of it?

Qu. 16. May not the usefulness of human Reason, and its concern as to the Christian Religion be great, though it be not admitted to be the chief Rule, but subjected to the Scriptures, wherein any Rivalship is pretended?

The Cases wherein Rivalship may be pretended, are such as these: (1.) If a revealed Doctrine of Faith is plainly contained ed and affirmed in the Scripture as a certain Truth, and the meaning of it be fully agreed; and yet a Dispute arise, whether that Doctrine be true or false; if my Reason cannot reconcile it with Truth, shall I believe that Doctrine to be true, because I know the Scripture affirms it to be a true Doctrine? or shall I reject it as false, because my Reason cannot reconcile it with Truth? (2.) If the Dispute be about the meaning of a revealed Precept or Doctrine, acknowledged to be in the Scriptures; must I search the Scriptures, and compare them, and conclude that to be the meaning, which is truly collected from the Scriptures so compared? or must I conclude against that meaning, and prefer such other Sense as I collect not from any part of Scripture, but altogether from other Topics?—In such Cases, ought I to suspect my Reason to be defective, and subject my Understanding to the Scripture? Or from an Opinion of the Infallibility of my use of Reason, condemn the Scriptures as false and imperfect?

But though a Christian yields the preference to Scripture in such Cases, the usefulness and concern of Reason are great in the Christian Religion.

Reason admits as a most self-evident Truth, that men are to obey whatever God commands, and to believe what he reveal-eth. It also condemns Idolatry, many Vices, Vices, and many false Opinions, all which oppose men's receiving the Christian Religion. It also approves of those Precepts of the Law of Nature, which the Scripture more fully explaineth; and of many Doctrines discoverable by its Light, which the Word reveals more perfectly: Yea, Reason has suggested to most Men, the necessity of some Divine Revelation, from the defect and uncertainty of natural Light, in what concerned the Worship of God, Expiation of Sin, &c. By such Things, and Inferences rationally deduced from them, the Minds of men are prepared to receive the Christian Religion, when proposed to them.

Reason with the Assistance which God affords to upright Enquirers, is also capable of judging of the Evidence of Revelation; and thereby to conclude, whether it be Divine or not. And as it requireth us to be diligent and impartial in the Enquiry, left we be deceived by Imposture; so true Reason will incline us to acquiesce in such Evidence as is proper and sufficient.

When we are rationally convinced, that the Revelation is of God, we must labour by Study, Meditation, and Prayer, to understand the revealed Truths, and to assent and approve of them, by bringing every Imagination into Submission to Christ. The Faculty of Reason being enlightened by the revealed revealed Truths, is to be exercised in comparing Scripture with Scripture for further Knowledge, and in making just Inferences by the Light of the Word, and in representing Truths with all proper, and especially Gospel Motives, to the Will, in order to its consent for practical Obedience; and in comparing our Temper and Practice with the Gospel and the Law of Nature, and in approving or condemning the same, according to their Conformity both to the Law of Christ, and the Law of Nature. In doing thus, we shew our selves Men and Christians too; and as wherein even our own Inferences from the Law of Nature seem to differ from the Explications of that Law in the Word, we must prefer those Explications as more certain than our own Reasonings from Nature; so we must examine those Explications with an Assurance of Mind, that God will command nothing by his revealed Word, which is against true Reason, or the Law of Nature rightly understood, though many Gospel Doctrines may be against what Infidels imagine by a Mistake of the Light of Nature to be their truest Reason. Reason is also of great Importance to defend the Christian Religion against the Attempts of Deluders: This can detect all false Conclusions illated from Scripture Premises, and prove all such Truths, which have their Foundation in the Light of Nature, (either

As to the large Catalogue of the Instances you give, wherein our Protestant Priests are divided, I shall leave it to be considered by others; who will easily find, that in most of what you quote from several of the Authors, their Sense is perverted by your concealing the true Occasion of their Expressions.

I shall consider only what you mention concerning the Eternity of Hell-Torments. You tell us, pag. 68. Our Priests dispute whether Hell-Torments are eternal; some of the most eminent either doubt of their Eternity, or deny them to be eternal. Among these you name Dr. More, and the excellent Archbishop Tillotson.

Qu. 1. Supposing (but not granting,) that αἰώνιον and αἰώνιος, and God's Communications, (as Dr. More thinks,) would not prove the Eternity of Hell-Torments, are not many other Arguments to be produced from Scripture, which are sufficient to convince us, that those Torments will be eternal? And the eminent Persons you instance, being Christians who had the Grace to believe the Word of God, it will not be improper to make use of Scripture Arguments in determining this Point.

Qu. 2.
Qu. 2. Not to mention other Arguments, will not a careful comparing of Mat. xxv. 31, 32, 41, 46. with 1 Cor. xv. 23, 24, 25, &c. prove, that Hell-Torments are eternal? For St. Matthew, and St. Paul, speak of the same Time, viz. the Day of Judgment. In St. Matthew, Christ pronounceth this Sentence in that Day on the wicked, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting Fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels: And he faith of them, These shall go into everlasting Punishment; a Punishment, reserved and respited to that Time. St. Paul faith, They who are Christ's, shall be made alive at his coming; and then cometh the End, when he shall have delivered up the Kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all Rule, and all Authority, and Power; for he must reign, till he hath put all Enemies under his Feet. Now,

Qu. 3. Is it not evident, that when Christ delivers up his Kingdom to the Father, he leaves the wicked under this Sentence; Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting Fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels; and the Execution of that Sentence but just begun?

Qu. 4. Must it not follow, that Hell-Torments must be eternal, unless the Damned obtain a Release from those Torments, after that Christ has delivered up the Kingdom to the Father?
Qu. 5. Will it be difficult to conclude, that the Damned shall not obtain a Release from their Torments, after Christ has delivered up the Kingdom to the Father, if we consider what Kingdom it is, and how delivered up? The Kingdom which Christ delivers up, in his mediatorial Kingdom; by which he applied the Fruits of his Death by mediatory Acts, and having all Power given him as Mediator, he exercised it till he had effectually attained the designed Ends of his Office; and this he did so perfectly, that the Godhead, as in Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, becomes all in all; as communicating Favours to the Saints, admitting Worship, and exercising Dominion, immediately, without the interposal of a Mediator, as ver. 28. The Kingdom and Priesthood of Christ, are said to be for ever, as to their being perfect in themselves; eternal in the Blessedness of the Saved, as their Effect; and succeeded by no other Priesthood, or mediatorial Kingdom; yet these will then be at a Period, as to mediating Acts: Our Lord Jesus converts no more men by his Power; he saves no more Sinners by his Merits; the Trust committed to him, he delivers up as fully discharged; and the vicarious Power, as successfully employed to all the Purposes for which it was delegated to him.

Qu. 6. The delivering up of the Kingdom of Christ being of this Nature, are there not many Reasons which will make it certain, that the Damned cannot be released from their Torments? and consequently, that Hell-Torments will be eternal? For instance,

(I.) Will it not be greatly to the Dishonour of Christ, and contrary to the Gospel of God, and of Christ, that the Damned be released? For they will not be released for the sake of the Merits of Christ; seeing they cannot be applied to any new Subject, after his Kingdom is delivered up. The Sentence of Christ must be also reversed; though it was according to the Sanction of the Gospel, which condemned the impenitent Unbeliever. Our Lord declares, that those must be slain before him, who would not submit that he, as Mediator, should reign over them; but when he has delivered up his mediatorial Kingdom, they cannot admit this man, as Mediator, to reign over them. By the Gospel, whoever comes to God, must come by Christ; but if the Damned come to God, it is not by Christ. We read, that Christ will be glorified and admired in all those, whom he does not punish with everlasting Destruction from his Presence; but he will not be glorified in those, who obey not the Gospel, as the way of their recovery. Can the Damned be released, when the Gospel, as the Rule of Judgment, is past into a Sentence against them; and this to be under an Administration,
A Letter on the

Atration, which the Mediator has no concern in? Angels are cursed, if they preach another Gospel. In the following Heads we shall see more of this kind.

(2.) Is it not very inconsistent with God the Father, to release the Damned, when the Mediator has delivered up the Kingdom? He committed all judgment to the Son; and will he become a judge in opposition to Christ, to favour his Enemies, and dissolve his Sentence? — Has God thought it not becoming his Holiness and Majesty to transact about Peace with Sin-ers here on Earth, except it were by Christ as Mediator, nor to save them from the Wrath to come without his Satisfaction? And will he make Peace with Rebell in Hell without the Mediator, and free them from Wrath, without regard to that Satisfaction, as if the work of Redemption were a needless contemptible Matter?
Or is there another Mediator of more Digni-ity than his Son Christ Jesus? — God is ever holy and just; and must not he abhor the Damned, if they retain their Malignity, and continue the Punishment Christ bound upon them, if they remain wicked? — Or if you should suppose them to be released as Converts, how shall they become so? It's not by the Word of Christ, nor by the Spirit of Christ, nor by Grace derived from his Fulness. — The Papists than can be found for admitting the Damned to a new State of Probation proper for Hell; and this, after Judgment is passed upon them, (which is the Judgment of God, 5. as well as of Christ;) after the Books, and the Door, are shut; yea, after that solemn Declaration, He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still: Their Worm that never dieth will aggravate their woe; and their gnashing of Teeth for pain and rage, they rather that a desperate Malignity will grow, than that Contrition from the Love of God, and Holiness shall begin, especially in Outlaws, who are in Hell incapable of meritng.

(3.) Are the Damned (if they could be released,) capable of entering into Heaven? Christ Jesus hath the Keys of Hell; and will he let out his condemned Enemies? Heaven is his Kingdom; and will he receive into it such as are none of his Subjects, no Members of his Body, nor Parts of his Church, nor written in the Lamb's Book of Life? Shall they possess that Glory, to whom he declared, I know you not; depart from me, ye workers of Iniquity? He is the way to Heaven, and has declared, there is no other Name under Heaven by which men must be saved; and can they be saved, who come not to Heaven by him, nor who owe any thing to that Name? Are these things consistent with God's God's declared Will, or with his Oath; who hath sworn, the Unbeliever shall never enter into his Rest?

(4.) If the Damned shall be released after Christ has delivered up the Kingdom, will it not be against God's own eternally decreed Method which he has fixed, as well as against the Gospel-Constitution? God is expressly said to have predestinated us unto the Adoption of Children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good Pleasure of his Will: And of such as are saved, we read, they are elect according to the Foreknowledge of God the Father, through Sanctification of the Spirit unto Obedience, and Sprinkling of the Blood of Jesus. But if the Damned are to be adopted, it's not by Jesus Christ that God adopts them to himself, nor by the Sprinkling of his Blood that they are saved.

These things will make it evident to such as believe the Scriptures, that they whom Christ Jesus puts under destructive Punishments (or condemns to be cast into Hell) at the last Judgment, can no more be released after he has delivered up the mediatorial Kingdom, than that it's possible, that God will rob his Son of the Glory of his being the only Mediator and Saviour of Sinners, will reverse his Sentence as unjust, will brand his Mediation as insufficient, will proclaim the Work of Redemption as vain, will contradict his own Gospel-Constitution.
Discourse of Free-thinking.

Institution as weak and false; will expose the solemn Proceedings of the last judgment as ludicrous; will erect a new Kingdom of Grace, at the Head of which Christ is not to be; will grant another State of Probation in Hell, for such as were condemned for wilfully neglecting that on Earth; will create a new Kingdom for such as cannot enter into Christ's Kingdom of Glory; and will reverse his own Eternal Decree, whereby he fixed the method of the Salvation of Sinners; whether that Decree be considered as conditional, or as absolute. No better hope can the Damned have, to escape out of that Fire, which is unquenchable.

I shall conclude this Matter with this Query.

Qu. Do not they who at all believe a Hell, run a bold and desperate Risque, if they flatter themselves in an irreligious Course, with the Expectation that the Torments of Hell are not Eternal?

What if the Light of Nature do no more than evidence, that there's a future State of Retribution, wherein the Wicked shall be punished in proportion to their Crimes, without determining the Term of Duration: Yet what Stupidity is he under, who reads the Scripture, and believes not the Account that gives of those Punishments, unless he can infallibly prove it to be an Imposture? Or does he who believeth lieveth the written Account, consult his own Safety, if he expect a Period to Hell-Torments; unless the Scripture gives him more express and plain Evidence for such a Period, than is produced for the Eternity of those Torments?

Suppose that eternus, or Everlasting, sometimes signifies a long Time, and not Eternal: Yet when Christ expresseth the Reward of the Saints by this word, intending it to be expressive of the Eternity of those Rewards; would he in his Sentence on the Wicked, make use of the same word at the same Time, with an intent to express the Torments of the Damned to be but Temporary? Would not he have mentioned a definite Time, and not have hardened them against Repentance by a word, that must induce them to despair of a Release?—And if Eternal Torments are (as some without Reason imagine,) inconsistent with the Divine Perfections, would he use a word that might be interpreted to reflect on those Perfections? For this word does generally express what is Eternal, and is fit to do so; and there's no apter word to signify what is perpetual.—Or can we doubt, if God has affirmed Hell-Torments to be Eternal, that they are certainly consistent with all his Perfections, and will in his Time be convincingly declared to be so, although we could not at present fully reconcile them therewith?

Mat. xxv. 41, 46.
But Believers will now say, We are sure, that the Judgment of God is according to Truth, who will render to every Man according to his Deeds; and, Righteous art thou, O Lord.

Will it be any relief, that Annihilation is hoped, because the Punishments of the Damned are expressed by such words as Death, Perish, Destruction? Whereas, those Terms express their Punishments from the first Moment they begin; they are fit, and are made use of, to express the high degrees of their Misery: and are joined with other terms, that signify the Persons who suffer are alive, and sensible of their Punishments; such as, being delivered to the Tormentors, weeping and wailing, and gnashing of Teeth, Tribulation and Anguish, &c. Finally, the long-suffering of the Lord, and willingness that all should come to Repentance, was so great, that men walked the more after their Lusts from a Conceit, that he was slack concerning the Promise of his coming; so that a longer delay, or forbearance of such Sinners, had done them no good, but hurt.

_Having commended Epicurus, pag. 129. as eminent for that most Divine of all Virtues, and wherein the greatest Pleasure of human Life consists, and of which an ill man is incapable, viz. Friendship; you say, pag. 130. We Christians ought still to have a higher_ a higher Veneration of Epicurus for this Virtue of Friendship, than Cicero; because even our holy Religion itself does not any where particularly require of us such a high degree of Virtue.

Qu. 1. Is Friendship among men the most Divine of all Virtues? Not to mention other Virtues, is not a sincere Love to God a Virtue? and is not he a more excellent Object of Love, and deserving of greater Love than is to be allowed to any Creature? Yea, to love any Man equally with God, shews that injurious Contempt of God, as may justly be termed a hating of him. But it seems, as Epicurus makes God regardless of human Affairs, so it's no wonder, they who have this Veneration for that Man, should assert that a Friend is more worthy of our highest Love, than God himself, whom he makes so useless to men.

Qu. 2. Are you well acquainted with the Delights of a watchful Christian, when you think Friendship is the greatest Pleasure of Human Life? For he accounts, that Communion with God, a Sense of his Favour, inward Peace, and the Hopes of Eternal Glory, much more contribute to the Pleasure of his Life.

Qu. 3. Is a profane man an ill man? Or are Idolaters ill men? Yet these are not incapable of Friendship in your Esteem. Who more profane, than Epicurus and his Followers?
Followers? And the celebrated Instances commonly given of Friendship, are among idolatrous Pagans.

Qu. 4. Are you serious, when you call that our holy Religion, and yet tell us, it is so defective in its Rules, as no where particularly to require that high degree of Virtue, and that for instructing us therein, Epicurus deserves our Veneration? Lawful Friendship our Religion appoints; but that's so small a part of it, that it would not deserve the Name of a holy Religion, if it required not higher degrees of Virtue, and other Instances of Piety.

Qu. 5. Can any lawful Friendship pretend to a higher degree of Love to Men, than what Christianity particularly requires? And is it not a higher degree of Virtue, to exercise this Love to the various Objects described by the Laws of Christ, than in that contracted Manner as what you call Friendship allows?

Our Lord Jesus tells us, that to love Mat. xxii. our Neighbours as our selves, is our great Duty, next after our Love to God: Yea, all the Law is said to be fulfilled in this : Gal. v.

And the end of the Commandment is Charity, out of a pure Heart, and of a good Science, and of Faith unfeigned. Wherefore as we have Opportunity, let us do good Gal. vi. to all men; which Love to all men is upon the account of their having the Image of God as Men. Our blessed Jesus commandeth mandeth us, Love your Enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you; that you may be the Children of your Father which is in Heaven. And by St. Paul, he requires, If thine Enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink. But with regard to such as are partakers of the same Grace,

What greater Instances of Friendship can be justly given, that exceed what the Gospel enjoins on the Followers of Christ to one another? By Love serve one another; and see, that you love another with a pure heart fervently. We must feed, clothe, visit them when sick or in prison; and sell our Estates, if they cannot otherwise subsist, as the first Christians did. We ought to have fellowship with them, to bear their Burdens; to be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another; to weep with them that weep, and rejoice with them that rejoice; and to be kindly affectioned one towards another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. We ought to lay down our lives for the Brethren; to confess our faults one to another; and if a man be overtaken in a fault, to restore such an one in the Spirit of meekness.

Are not these Rules fit to direct us to the height of Friendship, as far as it is a Virtue? Is it a Fault in Christianity, that it prescribes such kind Treatment towards our our Enemies, and to all Men? or that it calls for such high Instances of Friendship with all, who have the holy Image of Christ upon them? Sure it's the Honour of our Religion, to enjoin what argues us to be so like to God, and such Lovers of him: For the Christian Love is of a Divine Original, and founded on Divine Considerations.

In our Religion we have also the strongest Motives to induce us to Love. The Necessity of it is so asserted, that nothing can profit without it: All things that obstruct it, are forbidden; and whatever formeth the Heart in the best disposition towards it, is enjoined. Upon such Evidence, none can instance a defect in our Religion, as to true Love to men, unless they were so bent to quarrel with Christianity, as to condemn it for that, which is fit to recommend it, as the greatest Blessing to mankind at present. Happy World, happy Church, if this Christian Virtue prevailed! Then neither Revenge, Malice, Self-seeking, Envy, Pride, nor Rage, (all which it forbids,) would hinder the common Benefit of all Men; the most holy, wise, and useful, would be most esteemed; and a safe Foundation laid, that all other good Qualities and Offices might contribute to that delightful Satisfaction and Confidence, which flow from that more special Friendship, as results from a greater Harmony.
A Letter on the
Harmony of Tempers between some than others.

I shall take no notice of any of your mentioned Free-thinkers, except the inspired Writers of the Scripture, who are cited from pag. 150, to pag. 157.

Qu. 1. When you cite words from them as Free-thinkers, do you consider, that what they wrote was by Inspiration, and not from their own Suggestion, or private Thoughts? For the Prophecy came not in old time by the Will of Man; but holy Men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. It was the property of false Prophets, to speak Visions out of their own Heart, and not out of the Mouth of the Lord.

Qu. 2. Can any justly infer, that the Eternity of the World was Solomon's Judgment, from those words; One Generation passeth away, and another cometh, but the Earth abideth for ever? Can this import, that the Earth had no beginning, because it endureth longer than the successive Generations that dwelt on it? and perhaps, it may always continue, after it is purified. But Solomon assures you, the Earth had a beginning; where Wisdom says, I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the Earth was; —while as yet he had not made the Earth, nor the highest part of the

the Dust of the World; which may signify the first Matter.

Qu. 3. Have you better Reason to accuse Solomon, as one who denied the Immortality of the Soul, or argued against a future State? pag. 152. You produce Eccl. iii. 21. Who knoweth the Spirit of Man that goeth upward? And neither the Original, nor Context, can admit your reading, viz. Who knoweth that the Spirit of a Man goeth upward? But will you allow Solomon's Vindication of himself in this very Book? Eccl. xii. 7. Then shall the Dust return to the Earth as it was, and the Spirit shall return to God who gave it: And at the Close of it, ver. 13, 14. Let us hear the Conclusion of the whole Matter, Fear God and keep his Commandments; for God shall bring every Work into Judgment, with every secret Thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. Any who read this xiiith Chapter, must wonder you could represent so wise a Man as denying so important a Truth, or a future State: (pag. 152.) It is easy to prove, that these Truths were also known to the Saints under the Old Testament, and generally received as what influenced their Patience and Obedience.

Qu. 4. Is it the same thing for God, not to accept but reject the external Worship of a profane People, who from their hypocritical Observance of that, encouraged raged themselves to live wickedly, as it would be to deny that he had ever instituted that external Worship it self? You object, Jer. vii. 22. I spake not to your Fathers, nor commanded them in the Day that I brought them out of the Land of Egypt, concerning Burnt-offerings, or Sacrifices." But if you read the next Verse, you will find it explain'd; for he saith,
ver. 23. But this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my Voice, and I will be your God, and you shall be my People; and walk ye in all my Ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well with you:
But they hearkened not, &c. The plain Sense is this: "I did not command Burnt-offerings, as what would excuse your Obedience to any of my other Commandments which you neglect; nor were they alone, no, nor were they the principal Condition of my being your God, and your being my People, or of its being well with you: But the Condition was, that you should obey my Voice by walking in all my Ways, as well as in offering these Sacrifices." But to infer hence, pag. 154. That the Prophets wrote, as if they believed the Religion of the Jews was not the Institution of God, but an Imposture, is to charge God with a bad Memory, and Self-contradiction.
Nor can either the Holiness of God, or the Divine Institution of the Jewish Religion,
ligion, be accused, from Ezek. xx. 25. where he faith, Wherefore I gave them also Statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live. These Statutes cannot intend what concerned their Religion, except as they turned them into an occasion of Evil, or as opposed to the Gospel-Dispensation: For he faith, ver. 21. The Children rebelled against me, they walked not in my Statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them; which if a Man do, he shall even live. They must respect therefore a penal Permission of such idolatrous or civil Statutes, which their Heathen Enemies brought them under, as a just Punishment for rejecting the good Statutes the Holy God had given them.

Qu. 5. When, pag. 155, 156. you cite the true Prophets declaring God's Rebukses and Threatnings against the wicked Priests, and false Prophets, does what they say stigmatize good Priests, or true Prophets, or imply there can be none such? Were not several Priests and Prophets approved of God as good men, and as most eminently such? But moreover, does God nullify the Offices of true Prophets or Priests, by any of those Reproofs? We find, the Offices remained; the Aaronical Priesthood continued, till Christ put a Period to it by acting as a Priest of the Order of Melchisedek; and the Prophetick Office continued long in the Christian Church. Or does does God, in any of the cited Texts, in the least condemn the Office of either Priests or Prophets? No; instead of that, his severe Reproofs and Threatnings against these wicked Men, imply the great Account he made of both the Offices which they profanely managed: For the Indignation of God was excited against them, because Men in so sacred an Office as the Priesthood should be so wicked; and that vile Persons should pretend to so divine an Office as the Prophetick. The Dignity of these Offices aggravated their Sins, and exposed them to forer Punishments. If your design in these Instances be to condemn all the Ministers of the Gospel, because some of them are wicked; will not it follow, that all Free-thinkers must be Libertines, because some are so? Or if you would infer, that the Office of the Ministry is to be rejected, because bad Men pervert it to ill Purposes; is it not as rational to condemn Free-thinking, because this is abused by too great a Number to the worst Purposes?

I do not hereby insinuate, that Free-thinking is not both lawful and a Duty, when it's justly limited and directed to a proper and good End. Whether it has been thus managed in your present Performance, I leave to the Judgment of the Christian Reader, and the Reflections of

of your own awakened Conscience. In the mean time, you have Reason to suspect, that many well-meaning People will not be so much convinced by your strongest Reasons for Free-thinking, as they will be prejudiced against it, when they find you represent it as no other thing, than a raking only for such Stuff, as will most expose Revealed Religion, and a Gospel-Ministry.
SOME QUERIES
Relating to the BILL
For preventing the GROWTH of SCHISM.

Printed in the Year 1714.
SOME QUERIES, &c.

Qy. I. WILL it not bring a severe Persecution upon Dissenters, though eas'd and protected by a Legal Toleration, oft confirmed by Assurances from the Throne; and thereby encouraged to lay out their Money in the Publick Funds, South-Sea Stock, &c?

For will it not prove a Persecution against Dissenters, when they shall be excluded from several more Privileges than by former Laws? such as, Teaching to read, &c.

More of their Number are restrained from a Subsistence; as the Women, who have a Livelihood by Teaching to read: And further Qualifications are imposed on the Men, viz. Receiving the Sacrament after the manner of the Church of England.

The Penalties are also greater than by former Laws, if they keep any School. A-D d 3 among mong the rest, if they go at any time to any of our Meetings, they are for ever incapacitated to teach; yea, though qualified according to the Bill.

The Process against them if they offend, is more dangerous, and less agreeable to the former Liberties of Englishmen.

That general Clause in it [any other Literature] will give a handle to Apparitors and others to disturb, if not a foundation for convicting and punishing many, for following their Trades and Callings. Nor can the Restraint otherwise prevent Schism, than as it ruineth vast numbers of Men, who are useful and necessary to the Nation's Benefit and Safety: For Literature is not a Word determined by our Laws. Who knows then, but Attorneys, Apothecaries, Masters of Ships, &c. may be prosecuted for teaching their respective Arts to their Apprentices? as also, such as teach Anatomy, Surveying, Arithmetick; yea, Writing-Masters, (though the word Writing should be expunged;) for Letters and Learning are concerned in each of these?

Qu. II. Will it not bring Dishonour upon the Church of England? seeing that it's very inconsistent with the Preamble to the Occasional Bill, wherein she is declared to be against Persecution. This also promotes Ignorance. And will it not seem, that that she puts Her Majesty upon doing that, whence some will rashly think her forgetful of her many Gracious Promises, to prevent the Growth of Schism, to protect the Difsenters, and keep the Toleration inviolable? as also to invite her to permit Severities against her own Subjects, when her Majesty, with Zeal contends for the Rights of such Protestants abroad?

Again, Will it not proclaim the Weakness of the Church, as if the Occasional Act, so lately added to many other Laws and Advantages, were insufficient for her Support, whilst poor Old Women teach Children their A B C in English or French? Yea, will it be the Glory of the Church, to differ from all Nations; for none to whom a Liberty for Worship was granted, were hindered to educate their Children? Or will it be her Glory, to imitate the French King, who began the Extirpation of the Protestants by prohibiting their Schools; and to out-do Julian the Apostate, who declared it unnatural to cramp the Education of Children? As to the lessening her Repute among Foreign Reformed Churches, it's not worth the naming to some Persons.

Qu. III. Is it not against the Interest of the Church?

All who are true Members of it as a Church of Christ, will esteem themselves to suffer by the Errors and other things detrimental to Religion, which will hardly be avoided, when the Dissenting Teachers become illiterate, for want of Education at home. But if their Youth are sent abroad, they will (besides the Money there expended) probably receive Principles less moderate, and have more Learning to defend them, than can be expected in the few and small Academies of Dissenters in this Land.

Qu. IV. May not this Bill issue in the Growth of Schism, (as they call it?) For sober Englishmen abhor Severities, and pity the Persecuted; especially when under foot, and not wilfully Criminals. But they envy the Domineering, and suspect that Cause to be Antichristian, which inflames the Persecutors, and can’t subsist by less inhuman means than Violence; especially if they seem too potent already, or less circumspect in their Behaviour.

Qu. V. Are those of the Church who resolve to oppose Popery, sure those Times will never return, when a Popish Prince may attempt to ruin the Church, as possessed of Power, with all publick Emoluments; and in order thereto, tempt the Dissenters (by removing their Yoke) to stand Neuters? Or can they expect, that new Promises to these, will so easily obtain their to prevent the Growth of Schism.

their Assistance as formerly, when they are now again persecuting them, after such a plain Breach of repeated solemn Promises in the like Extremities?

Qu. VI. In present Circumstances at home and abroad, and when the most important Matters are depending, and Trade so reduced; have not the Popish Party the justest Reason to rejoice in, and expect Advantage from this Bill, as it divides, irritates, and weakens any true Protestants; especially such, as they think more remote from and zealous against them, than some others be? Nor ought it to be forgotten, that a House of Commons, (who, had they obtained the Bill of Exclusion, had saved us much Blood, Treasure, Honour, and Quiet,) and several Bishops since that time, have published, That the Dissenters were persecuted by the Instigation of Papists, and to serve their Interests.

Qu. VII. Are all Men in this blinded Age wise enough to comprehend the utmost Views and Tendencies of this Bill? Is it only to distress the Non-Conformists? No: For tho' more Hurt may be intended against them, if there be time enough for a gradual Progress; yet they being low Game, and having few left of greater figure than Tradesmen, may it not in time conduce to subject the Common and Statute Laws.
Some Queries on the Bill, &c.

Laws to the Canon Law? Will it not begin to raise the Bishops Courts to a Power unbecoming our Protestant, and inconsistent with our Limited Government?

It is true, the Church of England, whilst managed by real Protestants, can't be fatal to the Nation: Yet all her prudent and faithful Leaders know, the Romish Church, upon her growing Corruptions, proceeded gradually to determine the Succession of Princes at her Will, oft excluding such who had the Legal Establishment. But whether she condescended to admit their Title, or advanced a Competitor against Law, both must be made either mere impotent Cyphers, or formidable Tools to execute her ambitious Designs; as impowered to tyrannize over the People by a Standing Army of Slaves or Foreigners, with her Assistance. Nor was she disappointed, till the deluded Latiety, by the Smart of cruel Oppressions, were forced to see with their own Eyes; and from that dear-bought Conviction, to recover those just Rights they had foolishly resigned to the worst Usurpers, under the sacred Pretensions of Mother-Church.

A FUNERAL SERMON

Occasioned by The much Lamented Death
Of the late Reverend Daniel Williams, D.D.

WHO
Deceased January the 26th, 1715-16.
In the 73d Year of his Age.

By JOHN EVANS.

Printed in the Year 1716.
TO

Mrs. Jane Williams,

Relict of the Reverend Dr. Williams.

Madam,

You have here offered to your Eye, since your Circumstances allowed you not to hear it, the Discourse preached at your Desire upon Occasion of the Great and General Loss we have sustained. I tenderly sympathize with You in the Part You bear; and hope our compassionate High-Priest in Heaven does so too, in a much more beneficial Manner than any of Your Friends on Earth can do.

THE
The Dedication.

THE Sovereign Disposer of all Things has been pleased to give You sensible Experience, in this dying World, of the Vanity of earthly Comforts, by the Removal of many desirable Relations. Besides your first pious Comfort, (whose Memory is precious to them that knew him,) several of your immediate, and more remote Descendants, have been carried to their long Home before you. And while your Tears were yet flowing for one hopeful Branch of your Offspring, who was growing up apace towards Maturity; God has touched You also in that nearer Part, the Subject of this Discourse.

BUT, Madam, though You have thus had Sorrow upon Sorrow; yet you have no Reason to sorrow as One without Hope. Those sprung from You, who are called hence, were Children of the Covenant; and of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. The Excellent Persons, to whom successively You stood in the nearest Relation, laboured to please Christ in their Stations while they lived, and are now pleased in Him and with Him. Allow me therefore to desire, You'll bear some Part with Them in their present Joy. By the Favour of Providence You have a Prospect, superior to many others, of Comfort and Satisfaction from your surviving Posterity, who have been so agreeable and dutiful both to the Dead and to You. After threatening Distempers and hazardous Accidents attending them, You live to see them entred upon the World with Hopes of Service and Comfort.

BUT above all, your Highest and Best Friend in Heaven ever lives. He has shewn a Care and Fav'our for You and Yours hitherto, which has signally rewarded the Christian Bravery of your Pious Father, in quitting with Cheerfulness a noble Estate in France, rather than make Shipwreck of Faith and of a good Conscience. I should value the Entail of such a Blessing, far beyond the Possession of such an Estate without it. For while You and your Posterity shall continue to make it your great Aim, living and dying, to please the same Master; You may depend upon his Favour, in Life and Death too.

THAT the Great God may be a Husband to the Widow; That the Peace of God, which passes all Understanding, may keep your Heart and Mind in Christ Jesus; That the best of Blessings, for Time and for Eternity, may ever rest upon all Yours, and Theirs; and You may be guided by his Counsel, till You are brought to his Glory; is the hearty Prayer of,
The Dedication.

Honour'd Madam,

Your much obliged Friend, and affectionate Servant,

Feb. 16. 1715.

SERMON FOR
Dr. Daniel Williams.

2 Cor. v. 9.
Wherefore we labour, that whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him.

A Great Man this Day is fallen in our Israel: It is, I doubt not, the common Sense of this mournful Assembly. The Improvement of so affecting a Providence from the Pulpit, is devolved upon One on many accounts unfit for it; were it not, that as a Son with the Father, he hath served with him in the Gospel here for several Years past. When upon that account this Province is assigned me, by Her whose Authority I could not dispute in the Case; I would endeavour in the best manner I can, with God's Assistance, to excite you and myself, by the Life and by the Death of this excellent Minister of Christ, to prepare to follow him into his Master's Joy.

The highest Character of a Gospel-Minister, or of a private Christian, is drawn in the Text: And I think it was the most shining part of His. And the Temper and Course here exemplified is the surest way for us all in our several Stations, to obtain the glorious Rewards of another Life.

There were some, we find in the former Part of this Epistle, who had endeavoured to lessen St. Paul's just Esteem among the Corinthians, by false Intimations. Therefore, after other Arguments in Vindication of himself and his faithful Brethren, he urges the noble Principles which governed them in their Ministry; shewing, that they acted not upon Temporal Considerations, but the Prospect of a World to come, and the Rewards and Punishments in Reversion there.

He enters upon the Principles of their Hope at the 13th verse of the ivth Chapter, and carries it on through the Beginning of this. The Scope of his Argument is to this Effect: * "Knowing, " that God, who raised up Christ from the Dead, will raise up us also; " therefore we preach the Gospel faithfully, not fearing any present Evils " which

* Vid. Locke in Loc. which it may draw upon us. For we reckon the short Afflictions which may be endured here very inconsiderable, in comparison of the Eternal Things of a future Life; and we know that they will be so far from hindering, that they will increase our Happiness there. Therefore Death, which will bring us home to Christ, is no Terror to us. All our Care is, that, whether we shall stay longer in the Body, or soon leave it; whether living, or dying; we may approve ourselves to Christ in our Ministry." In the two Verses after the Text, he turns from their Hope to the darker Side, the Object of their Fear; the Punishment they must receive in the Day of Judgment, if they were unfaithful or remiss in their Trust.

While he is representing their Temper towards this and another Life, he launches out into an elegant Description of our Relation to both States; how the Case stands with us with reference to the Body, and what we expect in the Life to come.

(1.) Our Abode here, on the one hand, is but a Residence in a Tabernacle. Our Bodies are only a Tent set up for a Season, like the Tabernacle in the Wilderness; suited to the Passage-state wherein we are, and intended to be pull'd down ere long. But, on the other hand, we expect in the Life to come a more durable and excellent Dwelling, Ver. 1. A Funeral Sermon

ling, a House not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens; a Mansion for our Souls, immediately prepared by God without any Human Agency; suitable to the Perfection and Continuance of the Heavenly State; that is, Bodies of a nobler Contexture; spiritual, incorruptible, immortal Bodies. Upon consideration of the Difference, he goes

Ver. 2. In this we groan earnestly, desiring to be clothed upon with our House which is from Heaven: The Incumbrances and Sorrows and Sins, which attend us by occasion of our sojourning in our present Bodies, make us long for those of a Heavenly Make. If so be (or, Forasmuch) that being clothed, we shall not be found naked. If it were an absolute, perpetual Separation from the Body which was to be expected, the Law of our Nature would restrain us from desiring that: But since our vile Bodies are to be changed for glorious ones, therefore we desire this advantagious Change. For we, that are in this Tabernacle, do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that Mortality might be swallowed up of Life. Herein, as Christ upon the Cross expresses the Reluctancy of Human Nature to a Separation, when he said, If it be possible, let this Cup pass from me: So the Apostle intimates, that he and other Christians would not choose in itself to be stripped of their Bodies by Death, and to have them laid in the Grave, Grave. If they could have the same Change, as that which will be made by the Resurrection, to pass upon them without Dying, as it will on those found alive at Christ's Coming, this they could choose rather; an immediate Transfiguration of their mortal Bodies, into their incorruptible State. But we must understand him as designing a tacit Submission to the Sovereign Pleasure of God, in what way they should come at their perfect Bodies. These Aspirings towards the State of the Resurrection, he ascribes to the Operation of God, and particularly to his giving them the Spirit as an Earnest of the Inheritance.

But supposing they could not immediately pass from Imperfection to Perfection; but before they had their new Bodies, must lay down their old ones to see Corruption, and be pure Spirits for a Season: What would they choose in that State of the Case? Why, even upon those Terms they had rather be with their Lord. Though put the Case between Translation and Resurrection, they should certainly prefer a Translation; yet rather than be absent from the Lord, they would quit their Bodies. He therefore rises higher in the following words, and chooses to be separate from the Body rather than separate from Christ. To usher this in, he observes, that

(2.) While we are in the Body, we are are absent from the Lord; but when we leave the Body, we go to the Lord. This begins at ver. 6. The Original has a greater Force than our Translation, and contains a lively Turn of Thought, with which the Apostle seems greatly delighted: For he dwells upon it in one Verse after another. He represents Christians, as belonging in different respects to two several Countries. By their Natural Birth, while they continue imbody'd, this World may in some respects be called their Home, their Native Country. Here they came into Being, and this is now their Residence. They have many Interests and Affairs here, which concern them as well as other People. And towards this State, and the People and Things of it, there is a strong Bias in their Natures by means of their Bodies; like the particular Affection and Bent, which Men have for their own Country and People. Good Men themselves, till they lay down their Bodies, cannot and should not get above all Regards for these Alliances to Earth. But then, as they are new-born, they belong to another Country, where their Lord is; and to another People, the Family in Heaven. They are Citizens of the New Jerusalem, whether Christ as their Fore-runner is for them entered: And while they are here, they continue at a distance from their more proper Home, which must be with the Lord.

This
This different State of the Cafe is plainly described; Knowing that while we reside in the Body as our Home, we are absent from that other (that better) Home with the Lord. The next Verse tells us, how this is: Not that there is no manner of Converse or Intercourse between Christ and his Servants now: But 'tis at a greater Distance, and in a more imperfect Way: For we walk by Faith, and not by Sight: As a People out of their own Country, know the Affairs of it more imperfectly by Relation at Second hand, than they would do if they were upon the Place.

When the Cafe is thus stated, the Apostle declares, which of these he and such other Christians would chuse, if they had their Wish. They were willing rather (or they should be much better pleased,) to travel out of the Body, to quit that Home, and to get Home to the Lord. There was no room to hesitate in cool and calm Thoughts, which of these was preferable.

And thereupon, as the Conclusion of the whole Matter, he professes that Determination which we have in the Text: Wherefore we labour, that whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him. As if he had said; "Since we know the favour of Christ to be so valuable, that for the sake of the fuller Enjoyment of it we could cheerfully consent to leave"
"the Body and all Things here; therefore it is the Height of our Ambition, the Mark we chiefly aim at, that whether we are in Heaven or upon Earth, both during the Course of this mortal Life and when we are actually leaving it, we may be acceptable to our Lord."

That which was the Frame and Temper of the Apostle and his faithful Associates in their Times and Circumstances, is the real Disposition of all Christ's sincere Disciples in every Age, and in all the Stations which they are called to fill. So that we may justly found this General Maxim upon it.

That 'tis the great Aim and Endeavour of true Christians, both while they sojourn in the Body and when they leave it, to be acceptable and pleasing to their great Lord.

There is somewhat of this Temper in every Christian: And as far as any Man acts like a Christian, and worthy of that Name, this is indeed true of him. I shall therefore endeavour to state this Character distinctly to you. To that Purpose three Things are to be considered, which the Text points at.

First, The End itself which Christians propose, propose, or the Mark they aim at: To be accepted of their Lord.

Secondly, How they stand affected towards this End, and what they do in prosecution of it: They labour to be accepted of Him. The more comprehensive Sense of the Word will be considered presently.

Thirdly, The Extent and Compass of their Concern and Care to reach this great Design: Whether at Home, or from Home; whether sojourning in, or leaving the Body.

I. We are to consider the End itself, which Christians should propose and aim at. We read it, that they may be accepted of Him.

This Expression is used in the New Testament for our Admission into a State of Favour and Acceptance upon our first Believing. He hath made us accepted in the Eph. i. 6. Beloved. But that is not the Thing directly intended here. The Apostle, and those whom he includes with himself, were already in such a State, and assured that they were, so as to be able to look forward to another World with Comfort; as the whole Context shews. Every real Christian indeed, as far as he has remaining Doubts of his State of Acceptance with God, cannot but be solicitous to have it secured and cleared. But that is a Matter presupposed to the Design here in view. And
And the Original will be better expressed by rendering it, to be well-pleasing to him; that is, to be such, and to carry it in such a Manner, that Christ may be well-pleased with us.

The Thing aspired after may be described by the following Steps:

1. A Christian should desire, that Christ may take Delight and Complacency in him.

He should have something farther in View, than merely that the Sentence of Condemnation be reversed; that he may have a real as well as a relative Change, and may be such a one as his Lord will like. Now there can be no Complacency farther than there is a Suitableness : Hence

\[ \text{Rom. viii. 8.} \]

they that are in the Flesh, cannot please him; the absolute Dissimilitude of Nature and Temper makes it impossible. On the contrary, Christ delights in his Servants, as they bear his Image, and perform Obedience to his Will. Our Holiness is not the Satisfaction to Justice for our Sins; nor the meriting Consideration, for which we are accepted with God after our Apostacy: But 'tis the only Thing in us, which can be amiable in Christ's Eye. Therefore in Scripture he is spoken of as delighting in his Servants, only as they exercise Grace and live in a Course of Obedience. He that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him. Such as are upright. right in their Way, are his Delight. This then should be the Christian's Ambition, to have the inward Glory and outward Lustre of Holiness, which will be pleasing to his Holy Master.

2. It should be his Aim, that Christ's Delight and Pleasure in him may be more entire and nearer Perfection, than it has been hitherto.

Christ's Complacency in his own Servants rises or falls, in proportion to the Strength or Weakness of their holy Dispositions; to the Fervency or Decay of their Love and Zeal for God; to the exemplary Lustre of their Usefulness and good Works; or to their Falls into Sin and Slumber to the Dishonour of his Name. He cannot possibly like and approve any more in them than is truly Good: For Sin must be hateful to him in them, as well as in any others; he must be displeased at it, and with them for it. A Christian therefore should be solicitous, not only that he have something in him truly amiable in his Lord's Account, but much which he will approve. He should be afraid of any Thing remaining in him, or done by him, that may offend so good a Friend, and make it necessary that his Smiles should be turned into Frowns. He should aspire in all Things to be more the Man which Christ would have him be, in all holy Conversation and Godliness; to outgrow grow his Ignorance and Mistakes, and Carnality and Negligence; and to perfect Holiness in the Fear of God: That he may fully apprehend that, for which he was apprehended of Christ Jesus.

3. It should be his Desire, to outstrip others in Christ's Delight and Complacency.

An Emulation here is truly commendable. Christ does not delight in all his own Servants alike. Though they have all an equal Security for the essential Blessings of the Covenant; yet they are not equally the Objects of his Complacency; but in proportion to the Eminency of their Graces and the Brightness of their Character. Daniel is singled out as one greatly beloved. And among all the Apostles, 'tis said with an Emphasis of John, that he was the Disciple whom Jesus loved.

Those that shine with uncommon Rays of Holiness, the Excellent of the Earth, are his peculiar Delight: He has a special Value for them, he glories in them. Who would not be ambitious of such a first Place in the Esteem of his great Lord, as Job had! when God himself proposed him for a Non-such; Haft thou considered my Servant Job, that there is none like him in the Earth, a perfect and upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil? Every Christian should aspire to stand in the first Rank of his Worthies, and not content content himself with a vulgar share in his Master's Approbation.

4. He should be concerned, that he may receive the fulleft and most distinguishing Marks of Christ's Delight and Pleasure in him.

He encourages us to expect proportionable Discoveries of his Love, and peculiar Signs of Favour, if we outstrip others. In this World he is used to grant larger Measures of his Grace, to those who improve most carefully their present Stock, and to give most Comfort and Refreshments by the Way to his best Servants. He frequently honours them by extraordinary Favours of Providence or Grace, who honour him in the most distinguishing manner in the Course of their Lives. He gives them more remarkable Answers to Prayer, more cheerful Foretafts of Glory, or the like Tokens of special Love. This is ordinarily his way with his Servants now.

But suppose eminent Saints should miss of these, or some of these Signals of distinguishing Favour now; yet we have certain Assurances of a full Distinction to be made in the Life to come, not only between the Enemies and the Friends of Christ, but among good Men themselves, according to the Degree of their Care to serve and please him. People are differently employed; but according to the Labour they use in their Stations, their Wages will be.
1 Cor. iii. He that planteth, and he that watereth, are one; and every man shall receive his own Reward, according to his own Labour. The present Life is the Seed-Time for us all; but the Harvest will answer the Seed sown.

2 Cor. ix. He which soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully. Of those that get to Heaven, some will find their Happiness abated by the Alloys in their Character on Earth, in comparison of more uniform Christians. Some build on Christ the true Foundation Gold, Silver, and precious Stones: Now upon the Trial, if any Man's Work abide which he hath built, he shall receive a Reward, that is, a proportionable Reward: But if any Man's Work shall be burnt, as far as it will not stand the Trial, he shall suffer Loss, it will lessen his Reward; but he shall be saved, yet so as by Fire; with great Difficulty, in comparison of the other. They that turn many to Righteousness, shall shine as the Stars. Now certainly such Declarations as these, are not made with no Design; but to excite our Ambition, to covet the best of our Master's Gifts, and the highest Marks of his Favour. Though we are unworthy to have the meanest Place in his House on Earth, or especially in the Heavenly State: Yet when he has set the highest as a Prize in our View, it is not Modesty, but an unworthy Meanness of Spirit in a Christian, not...
not to aspire to the noblest Recompences, with which the King of Glory will delight to honour his special Favourites.

II. I AM to shew, How Christians stand affected towards such an End as this, and what they do in prosecution of it.

We labour for this purpose: So we translate the Word μπαμεφα. In its original Sense 'tis as much as to say, We love or desire it as a Point of Honour. And as Ambition is a powerful Principle of Action, from thence it comes (both in the New-Testament, and in other Authors,) to signify the Pursuit of any End with uncommon Study and Diligence and Application. As an ambitious Courtier, who is set upon gaining his Prince's Favour, will turn about in his Thoughts all ways of compassing his End; make every Thing he is Master of, subservient to his Design; relinquish other Aims, when they cannot be made to comport with this; and use unwearied Pains, and persevering Labour, to come at his Point: So the Christian should stand affected towards his great End of pleasing Christ; and thus should he act, that he may reach it.

THREE Things may comprehend the Christian Temper in this Case.

1. A CHRISTIAN settles it with himself for his highest Ambition to please Christ.
It should be a determined Point with us, that this is the most honourable Aim we can have in View. The Generality of People form quite another practical Judgment, and accordingly govern themselves by it. They are easily diverted from their Duty, or persuaded to embark in the worst Interests, because they seek not the Honour which cometh from God only. But a true Christian will esteem it the greatest Honour of which he is capable, to stand fair in Christ's Esteem, and to have a Prospect of receiving his blessed Approbation of Well done, good and faithful Servant. The Dignity, the Wisdom, the Supream Authority of the Approver, give his Sentence the greatest Weight. Men court the Favour of Princes, and value themselves mightily upon a Share in it: What should it then be accounted, to stand fair with the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords? To be in the good Opinion of Men of good Sense and Judgment, is justly valued: But here is the most infallible Judge of true Worth. We study especially to please those, from whom we have the most to hope or fear: But Christ is to pass the definitive Sentence upon all Men and all their Actions, so as to adjudge them past Retrieve either to everlasting Life, or to Shame and everlasting Contempt. The Christian therefore wisely esteems this, the Aim most worthy of his Nature and Obligations, of his his Profession and best Interests; and therefore comes to a fixed Resolution, that he will make it his Study to shew himself approved to him.

2. He makes all other Considerations give place to this his highest Ambition.

As we cannot serve two Masters; so we cannot make two Sorts of Good our supreme End; but either we shall hate the one, and love the other; or else hold to the one, and despise the other: Either be violently set upon the one, and against the other; or at least, most steadily pursue the one, and treat the other in comparison with Indifference. A Christian therefore, having determined this to be his most becoming and reasonable Aim, to please his Master in Heaven, will allow nothing else the same Place; much less will he make this to truckle to lower Designs. He is not so set upon pleasing himself, but that he can cheerfully consent to deny himself too, that he may follow and please his Master; to relinquish his Ease, when his Master calls him out to hard Service; or to expose his Credit and Reputation, when he cannot avoid Reproaches without being unfaithful to Christ and his Interest. For he pursues his Approbation, through Honour and Dishonour, through evil Report and good Report; yea, even his Life he counts not dear to him; so that he may finish his Course with Joy. He is willing to please other Men, as far as is consistent with his Duty: For he pays a due regard to the Authority of Superiors, to the Tenderness of Relations and Friends, to the Judgment of the Wife and Good, and even to the common Opinion of the World: All these have their Weight with him in their proper Spheres. Christianity teaches him, by all innocent ways, to recommend himself to the Love and Esteem of other People; to please his Neighbour for his good to Edification. For this purpose he'll practise frequent Forbearance and many Condescensions, and freely part with his own Right in some Cases: But he will not suffer by any means, this End to be set on a Level with the pleasing of Christ: In that comparative View the Apostle says, If I yet pleased Men, then were I not the Servant of Christ. He behaves inoffensively to Men as far as he can, as a Part of his Duty to Christ: But when he must break with them, or offend his Master, then comparatively he will hate Father and Mother, and Wife and Children, and Brethren and Sisters, and his own Life also for Christ's Sake. He obeys God, rather than the greatest Authority upon Earth; and renounces the Influence of the dearest Friend, with a Get thee behind me, Satan. In a Word, he dares not commit the least known Sin, or deny the least Truth.
Truth of God, to please all the World or the best Man upon Earth.

3. He will carefully direct his Actions and Endeavours in the best Manner he can towards his great End.

This directly expresses the Force of our Translation. We labour to be well-pleasing to Christ. 'Tis a vain Thing to profess that we desire and intend his Approbation, if the Course of our Actions is quite another way; or indeed, if they carry not a plain Bias and Tendency towards it: For that is a Man's governing Aim, which he chiefly pursues. He that would in earnest be what Christ would have him be, cares how he may please the Lord. I mean not, that this Design can be supposed actually to come into his Thoughts in every particular Action he does: That is next to impossible. But such a Man will take a great deal of Pains to discover his Master's Will; to prove what is acceptable to the Lord, whose he is, and whom he desires to serve. He employs himself most in such Things, as are certainly agreeable to him: He cannot satisfy himself to want, or so much as seem to want, the Qualifications indispensably necessary to his Acceptance; and his Pleasure and Business is in the Discharge of his Duty: Whereas, on the contrary, he keeps a strict Guard against every known Offence. In the deliberate and more important Actions tions of Life, he will oblige himself to enquire particularly, how far they suit with his Design. All the Talents and Capacities he is furnished with, are consecrated without Reserve to his Lord: Nor can he be content to refer one Sort of Actions only to this End, while others are ordinarily exempted; as suppose a Man should pretend to please Christ in his Religious Actions, but not in the Course of Common Life. A sincere Christian pursues his Approbation in every Station he fills; in every Relation wherein he stands; with every Talent, natural or acquired, of Body or Mind or Estate, wherewith he is intrusted. A devoted Servant of this Master cannot satisfy himself to neglect his Duty, when he can propose no other Aim by it besides Christ's Acceptance; as for Instance, such Parts of his Duty as are invisible to Men, or unreputable in the account of the World. He will take pains, to purify his Heart, as well as his Life; to adorn the hidden man of the Heart, which in the sight of God is of great Price; and to manage all his Performances in that Manner, which he has reason to hope Christ will like best; to do all heartily and cheerfully, as to the Lord, and not to men; and to carry his Conformity and Obedience to him, to the greatest Heights he can. He'll think himself concerned, in Acts of Worship, not to bring the torn, and and the lame, and the sick, but the Male of his Flock; and in the Service of Life, to do his best for the Glory of God and the Benefit of his Generation.

There is yet another Branch of the Character to be enlarged upon; and that is,

III. THE EXTENT AND COMPASS OF A CHRISTIAN'S CONCERN AND CARE TO REACH HIS EXCELLENT AIM. Whether present, or absent; whether continuing in the Body, or dislodging out of it; he presses towards the Mark of this Prize, to be acceptable to Christ.

Some indeed refer this, to our Acceptance with Christ: As if the Apostle had said, "We desire, that Christ may be "well-pleased with us here and hereafter:" "We strive, both for those Marks of Acceptance which he grants his Servants in "this World, and especially for the higher "Tokens of it in the Life to come."

And this is, without doubt, in the Christian's View; as there has been Occasion to shew already. He is solicitous for the Grace and Mercy he needs from Christ by the Way; and for his Mercy also unto Eternal Life. He desires to belong to Christ's Family, on Earth, and in Heaven too.

But I apprehend, we are rather to refer these Words, to the Christian's Concern about being acceptable to Christ. As if he had had said, "Whether we are going on in " Life, or on the very Borders of another " World, this is the Ambition and Concern " of our Souls*." This emphatical Addition may bespeak three Things.

1. That a Christian is more concerned to have Christ pleased with him, than about the Time of his Life or his Death; whether he is to continue in the Body, for a longer, or a shorter Time.

Thus the Words will be brought in as a Sort of Check to those eager Desires of leaving the Body and going home to the Lord, which the Apostle had expressed in the foregoing Verse. " However, though " were I to choose for my own Interest, " I should gladly quit this Body to be " with my Lord: Yet as to that, not as I " will, but as my Lord will. I am content, for that and every Thing else, to " he concluded by his Determination. " Let me but have my higher Wish in " this, that I am acceptable to Christ; and " then, whether in the Body, or out of the " Body, I am fully satisfied in his Choice " for me." He expresses just the same Tempe

* As the words lie in the Original, they may admit of either Sense: Διό καί πιλάτουμεθα, ετε ενδιμωστε, ετε ενδιμωστε, ευαγεσει αυτω εναι. The words I am now considering, lie in the midit between πιλατουμεθα and ευαγεσει; and therefore may without Absurdity be applied to either. Yet I apprehend, if they were intended to relate to the last, they would rather have run, ευαγεσει αυτω εναι, ετε ενδιμη. &c.
for Dr. Williams.

Temper in his Epistle to the Philippians; According to my earnest Expectation and my Hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed; but that with all Boldness, as always, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my Body, whether it be by Life or by Death. His greatest Hope and Wish was, that Christ should be magnified in him; whether by his Life, in active Service to his Interest; or by his Death, suffering for the Testimony of Jesus. And therefore, tho' afterwards he declares the same Preference of a Departure to be with Christ, as he does in this Context; yet upon an Apprehension that it would be more for the Interest of Christ and his Church, that he should remain a little longer below, he expresses himself fully satisfied to do so. Such ought to be the Frame of Christians in general. Heaven should be preferr'd to Earth, as far better: But they should be fully willing to stay or go at Christ's Pleasure; to exercise Patience in waiting for their own Reward, till they have done all the Service which Christ will have from them below; and have borne all the Exercise he is pleased to assign them, either by suffering for his Cause, or enduring the Pains and Sickness of a crazy Body, or the Infirmities of Age. Faith and Patience are indeed needful to a Christian, who knows he shall go to his Father's House when he leaves this; that after after he has done the Will of God, he may receive the Promise: But this he should be striving and praying for, that he may be cheerfully willing to deny himself in this, as well as other Cases, for the pleasing of his Master.

2. It may intimate, that a real Christian continues and perseveres in this holy Temper to the End.

He defers not, on the one hand, to make Provision for so important a Concern till his last Moments; but pursues his Prize, living as well as dying; and though he should begin early, would reckon the whole Course of this short Life little enough to lay in for the Smiles of his Master. On the contrary, he is not satisfied with a transient Care in this Matter; but keeps up the same Concern to the last; as knowing, that if he should draw back, Christ would have no Pleasure in him. A lively Christian works hard all the Day, and yet is not weary of his Master's Service in the Evening. And for certain, when he comes actually into the separate State, he'll be far from changing his Bias: Though there will be no Occasion then for any painful Pursuit of his Design; yet a Tendency, a Bent towards it, will be the Temper most connatural to his confirmed and perfect State.

3. This may be intended to signify, that a Christian will shew his Desire to please please Christ, both in Life and Death, by a suitable Behaviour in both. If he lives, he lives to the Lord; and if he dies, he dies to the Lord; whether he live therefore or die, he is the Lord's.

As long as a Christian remains in the Body, to him to live is Christ. He will readily do him all the active Service he can, while he has Breath and Being, with his Health, and Strength, and Capacities of all Kinds. As a Probationer and a Citizen of this World, he endeavours to manage himself with a farther View than to this World: Though he lives in it, his Life is directed to higher Aims, than any Thing within the Bounds of Time.

And when he has it in nearer View, that he shall leave the Body; yet he'll express a Devotedness to Christ in ways suitable to his present Circumstances. When dying, he labours to please Christ. If he is threatened with Death by the Cruelty of Persecutors, unless he will be unfaithful to his Master; he is content to offer Life a Sacrifice to him: As St. Paul speaks, I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the Name of the Lord Jesus. And when Death makes it's Approaches in the ordinary way, as he has Room and Opportunity, he will be glad to do Christ Service in his last Moments; to be a Witness of his Goodness and Fidelity, and of the Pleasures of his Service, to those about him; and to leave the best impressions he can, on the Minds of his surviving Relations or Friends: As St. Peter, knowing that he must shortly put off this Tabernacle, endeavoured, that those who had been his Charge before, might be able after his Decease to have the things wherein he had instructed them always in Remembrance. A good Man will contrive with pleasure for the Good of future Times, when he is bidding an Adieu to the World himself; that Christ's Honour may be promoted, and his Service advanced, as far as he has a Capacity for it, when he himself is dead and gone. Charitable Benefactions out of his Substance, or good Advices to those that come after him, will be a pleasant Employment, when Flesh and Heart are failing. 'Tis true, Good Men have not always Time, or Strength and Spirits, for this; or they may not be apprehensive of Death immediately approaching: For the best Men may be surprized with the Harbingers of Death, as well as other People, or may not be sensible how near Life is ebbing out; though they are not surprized with Death itself, so as to be altogether unprepared for it. But supposing a Christian, to discern his Departure at hand, to be in a present cheerful Frame, and to have a desirable Supply of natural Spirits; he will be glad...
for Dr. Williams.

to seal his Testimony for Christ with his last Breath.

And now, having drawn out this Character of a real and lively Christian, according to the Apostle's Description in the Text; 'tis fit I should come to make some Application. And that shall be in the following Inferences.

(1.) We may collect hence, how great a Thing it is, to be a Christian.

'Tis far more, than wearing a different Name from the rest of the World: For it refines and raises a Man's governing Aim and Bent. It gives him a new Centre, and consequently alters his Tendencies and Inclinations. He chiefly loves and regards an unseen Saviour, and makes more account of his Smiles or Frowns, than of the Friendship or Enmity of all the World. And his Course of acting is suitable to a Heart thus fixed. May it not then be justly feared, even of most that bear the Denomination, that they are altogether unacquainted with the Temper and Spirit, of Christians! They pass under the Name: But the Designs they plainly pursue, mark them out for Men of the World, whose Portion is in this Life. They rise up early, and sit up late, and eat the Bread of Carefulness, to compass some secular Design: But the pleasing of Christ appears to have little little Place in their Thoughts, because 'tis evident that is not made the Scope of their Lives. They are either pursuing Ends inconsistent with this, or discover a Negligence here, which speaks other things to have the Ascendant in their Affections. But the true Christian first settles his great End, and then in the main of his Character acts consistently with it both living and dying.

(2.) This Character of a Christian, may justly put the Best among us to the Blush, and engage to deep Repentance and Humiliation, that we act so far beneath the Aims by which we profess to govern ourselves.

If Conscience can vouch for us, that we have fixed our End right; yet in how many Cases may it be our Monitor, That either we forget our chief Design, or pursue it with great Coldness and Inconstancy! It was our Saviour's Observation, and every Age proves it too true, That the Children of this World are wiser in their Generation, than the Children of Light: That is, Those who have acted the most foolish Part in the Settlement of their chief End, satisfying themselves with a Portion here, generally take wiser Steps in pursuit of the Good they have fixed upon, than those, who have made their Choice by better Light, ordinarily do for securing suring theirs. The ambitious Courtier, the covetous Miser, the Man of Pleasure, prosecute their several Aims with Eagerness and Application; can deny themselves in other Matters to reach the Point of their Wishes; and are very solicitous to know what Progress they make towards their End by all their Endeavours. But how often may Conscience reproach us with practical Indifference in our greatest Con-cernment! We suffer ourselves to go off from our Centre; we forget our Master, and how we should behave to him; we let other Aims carry us impetuously after them, and go on at an Uncertainty whether our Master approves us or no. Such Sallies from our main End, are the greater Reproach to us, when we have fixed our Choice on a Design so worthy and reasonable. It should humble us before God, and at the Bar of our Consciences, that when we took the wisest Step of our whole Lives in determining to seek the Favour of Christ as our principal Interest, we should carry it more irrationally in Pursuit of such an End, than those who have only fading Trifles in view.

(3.) We should all be excited to a Conformity of Temper to that expressed here by the holy Apostle: We should be delivered into the same Mould.

Are you hitherto utter Strangers to any any such Bias? Have you never bent your thoughts towards pleasing of Christ; but merely lived to your selves, or the Humours and Inclinations of your Fellow-Creatures? Think a little, how unjustly and unrighteously you have lived. Christ has the most undoubted Claim to your being thus affected towards him. You are his in Right, before your own Consent. He is clothed with his Father's Authority for your Subjection: He has bought you with the Price of his own Blood: Most of you have been solemnly dedicated to his Service: You call him Lord, which bespeaks your full Obligation to this. Either therefore renounce the Name of Christians; or let Him be owned in his Claims from you. How ungrateful is your Refusal, after all his Condescension and Grace! He pleased not himself, but became a Man of Sorrows, made himself of no Reputation, became obedient unto Death, for your Sakes: And can you refuse this Return of Duty and Affection? You are called to live to him, who died for you, (that you might become pleasing to God through him,) and rose again, that he might receive the Testimonies of your Devotedness to him. What Enemies are you to your own Interest, by standing out against this Demand! You have no other way to secure your everlasting Welfare, but by his Favour. Can you think of dying, while while He is not your Friend, who has the Keys of the invisible World and of Death; who has the Power to give eternal Life, or sentence to eternal Death! You have a more certain way to secure his Approbation, than the Esteem of men: They are humorous, inconstant, and of different Sentiments: But he is of one Mind, and has let us know his Will; and is easily pleased by any one that heartily makes it his Business: If there be first a willing Mind, it is accepted according to that a Man has. And I may justly say, if you would be persuaded to make a Trial, you would find the truest Pleasure to yourselves in pursuing Christ's Approbation. In Pursuit of this End, you would find Rest to your Souls, and that Peace of God through Christ, to keep your hearts and minds, which is not to be met with elsewhere.

If we have deliberately settled upon this for our governing Aim, let us pursue it with the Spirit of the Text: Often review our End; recall ourselves, when we are going off from it; and press towards it with more Zeal, and Steadiness, and Uniformity; endeavouring to walk worthy of our Lord, unto all pleasing. Every Branch of Holiness and Duty will be then natural and easy to us; in keeping his Commands we shall feel a great Reward. Conscience will furnish us with a constant Entertainment. Afflictions and Sufferings will lose their their Sting: Christ, whom we serve, will care for us, and be with us, in all our Difficulties: His Spirit will help our Infirmities, and abide with us as a Comforter. Death itself will have a cheerful Aspect; and an Entrance will be ministered to us abundantly into his everlasting Kingdom.

(4.) We have great Reason to lament it as a sensible Loss to our World, when such Christians, and especially such Ministers, are removed hence, as were eminently governed by this noble Aim.

Such Persons are the most diffusive Blessings, while they live: Acting under this Influence, they fill up their several Stations at another Rate than the common Rank of People, to the Honour of God and the Good of Mankind. Ministers especially, (as their Office and Business has the most beneficial tendency to the highest Interests of men,) when they behave themselves in their Work with a lively Regard to their Master's Judgment, spread a Blessing around them, and have such Opportunities to do Good as come not in every one's Way. Therefore all the Time allowed them to stay below, while they are capable of acting for their Master, is a Kindness to the Places where they are. To abide in the Flesh (says the Apostle,) is more needful for you. And if their Wisdom and Experience are ripened by advancing vancing Years, they may do more Service then in a small Compass of Time, than they were capable of before in a far longer Space.

You are therefore all sensible, what a wide Breach is made upon us in the Death of our venerable Father and dear Friend, whose Remains were lately laid in the silent Dust; who among all his Excellencies was most eminent for this, that living and dying he laboured to please his Master in Heaven: For this consecrated all his other Endowments, and made them shine with Lustre, and spread a lively warmth around.

He was furnished with many uncommon Advantages for Service. God blessed him by Nature with an unusual Genius: He had a copious invention, a penetrating Judgment, a faithful Memory, and vigorous Affections: These were cultivated by much thought, and diligent reading. His Mind was capable of the closest Application, and could easily dive into Points of no small Difficulty, immediately fasten upon the main Hinge of a Debate, (which was especially remarkable in his Resolution of Cases of Conscience;) could survey the Compass of an Argument, turn it on all its Sides, and represent it in all its Views, with as great Force and Quickness as were ever met with in any man. This natural Strength Strength of his Mind supplied some Disadvantages in his Education at first setting out, which would have cramped a common Genius through his whole Life.

To such a Make of Mind was added a strong and vigorous Constitution of Body, which was favourably continued to him till his elder Years. That Distemper, which most of his Friends apprehended might have been peculiarly dangerous to him, the Small-Pox, he escaped to the last. And before he appeared in this City, he was possessed by the Bounty of Providence of a considerable Share of worldly Substance; which, with his large Acquaintance and diffusive Influence, gave him Advantages for Usefulness beyond many of his Brethren.

These Things indeed, without good Principles and Ends to govern them, will not serve to brighten a Character: When wrong set, they only make men more capable of opposing the Interest of Christ in the World. But that which gave them all a real Lustre in him was this, that he lifted them All in the Service of his Great Lord.

He began to mind Religion in earnest in his younger Years; as I have learnt from his own Converse, and the Information of others who knew the Zeal of his youthful Days: And entred upon the Ministry Ministry on the despised bottom of Non-conformity, in an early part of his own Age, not being then arrived at twenty; and one of the earliest of the rising Generation, after the melancholy Ejection of Two thousand Ministers in 1662.

When he had preached for a few Years occasionally in several Parts of England, and found the Times here so frowning on a Protestant Dissenter, that he could have little Prospect of pursuing his Ministry on this side the Water; Providence very seasonably opened him a way for Service in Ireland; where even in those Times the Government saw fit to treat Men of his Principle, amidst a Swarm of bigotted Papists, in a very different Manner from the Usage of their Brethren here, and even from the Difficulties thrown upon the Presbyterians of Ireland since, whereby their Hands are tied down to this Day from serving the Government. As he made an occasional Visit to a pious Lady *, who was not ashamed of the Dissenters Chain; he received an unexpected Invitation to be Chaplain to a Noble Family of that Kingdom †. There he found a Refuge from the Storm, and at length was called to the Pastoral Office in the City of Dublin over a Congregation of principal Figure there. In that Kingdom he had an Opportunity of publick Service, for near twenty Years, by his Labours in the Pulpit, by his prudent Advice, by the Improvement of the Interest he obtained in Persons of the highest Rank, and by many other Methods in which Providence chose to make him a general Blessing. There he filled his Station with unusual Acceptance, in great Harmony with his Brethren in the Ministry, and respected by most who were hearty Protestants in that Island; till he was driven away with many others, by the tyrannical and violent Proceedings of a Popish Administration in the Reign of King James.

In this City, to which he made his Retreat, he was soon observed and esteemed, and invited to more Congregations than one for their stated Minister. But God, in his kind Providence, reserved him for You, where he has continued in the Service of the Gospel about Twenty-seven Years.

Upon the Death of the pious Mr. Baxter, he was chosen into the Merchants Lecture at Pinner's Hall. There was another Competitor proposed*; and the Electors happened to be equally divided. It was therefore immediately agreed, that they should appeal to Providence by a Lot; which fell upon him. Upon this Occasion, a Person well known to be a Judge of men, men, and far from being prejudiced in his Favour, said, "That though he had "served his Friend, yet now he thought "every one ought to acquiesce in the "Choice, upon immediate Direction of "Heaven, and that Mr. Williams was a Per- "son of the best natural Parts in England."

The unhappy Differences, which fell out afterwards, and the strange and hard Treatment which he met with from some, I chuse to pass over in Silence; wishing, (as he did,) that it may for ever be buried in Forgetfulness. It is neither in my In- clination, nor a Thing becoming me, to revive those preter-natural Heats, since the Flame was far spent before my Acquaintance with him. Yet I cannot forbear mentioning it, to the Praise of this Congregation, that You faithfully stood by your Minister in all his Difficulties; and to the Praise of God, (as I have heard him and many others take notice of it, who were acquainted with the Transactions of those Times,) that God gave him that Sedateness and Calm, beyond his natural Temper, and that Presence of Mind under his eager Prosecutions, which defeated the Designs against him. And I will add with Pleasure from my own Knowledge; that he lived to soften the Minds of many who were most angry at him, and to convince not a few, that they had taken up very wrong Apprehensions concerning him.

I am satisfied, those who knew him best, had the greatest Esteem for him; and could not but discern just Grounds to believe, that his governing Aim was to be acceptable to Christ.

In the Exercise of his Ministry, he studied to shew himself approved to God, and to every man's Conscience in the Sight of God. He had a very strong Conviction of the Importance and Design of the Ministerial Work; and therefore diligently laboured in it in Season, and out of Season. His Subjects were generally of a practical Nature; and yet (whatever some have suggested,) he was a strenuous Afferter of the Grace of God. His Thoughts were solid and copious; so as to go over the whole Compass of a Subject, and to take in an uncommon Variety of that which was pertinent to it. His Manner of managing it, was plain and Scriptural; with an Intermixture of doctrinal and applicatory parts, with great Propriety and Life. Light and Heat were joined together in his Discourses. He seldom closed a Sermon without a particular Address to good and bad Men, according to the Tenor of his Subject; and some close Questions to them upon it, which were peculiarly adapted to send them Home in a serious Frame.
He had a special Happiness in explaining the Nature of our Covenanting with God, so as to make People sensible of the Design and Force of it. And I cannot but apprehend, we should find it turn to a good Account in the Course of our Ministry, if we were more plain and frequent in this important Matter.

And as he preached in earnest, so he was a constant Preacher. When he was seized seven Years ago with that first Illness, which began visibly to break his Constitution, he was heard to say, "that from his first Entrance upon the Ministry to that Time, he had never been obliged wholly to omit Preaching for above five Lord's-days." And with what unwearied Zeal he continued in that his beloved Work among you, though frequently under great Indispositions in his later Years, you are all Witnesses.

His Successes were remarkable as well as his Labours, for the Conversion of some, the Improvement of others, and the Direction many received by the Word of God in his mouth in particular Difficulties; of which I could tell some remarkable Instances. His anniversary Sermons to young People on that Day of leisure, Christmas-Day, (which he preached himself all the time he continued among you, except once,) had the Blessing to begin a good Work in several.
The same Love to his Master's Interest, which spirited him to so much Zeal in his own Ministerial Work, induced him to encourage the Sons of the Prophets, and the younger Generation of Ministers. No man was a more candid Hearer of their Publick Performances, or more glad of an opportunity to help them forward into Usefulness; and yet no man a more faithful Friend by kind and necessary Admonitions, when there was Occasion for it. Upon Eleven Years Experience I must declare, that such was his Condescension and friendly Behaviour in all that Time to one so much his Junior, that I could not expect to serve in the Gospel with any other with more Easiness and Satisfaction of Mind. And I have had the same Account from both my worthy Predecessors in that Relation to him, both in Ireland and England *

The same Design which he pursued in the Pulpit, was the Thing he had in View in his Writings also; viz. the Service of Christ. As he endeavoured conscientiously to form his Principles of Faith and Practice upon an impartial Enquiry into the Mind of God in the Scriptures: So wherever he thought Truth carried him, he boldly avowed it without Disguise or Concealment, whatever Censures or Oppositions tions he might have reason to expect. And whatever he thought the present Truth, or that Branch of the Christian Scheme which was most struck at in any present Juncture; he was one of the most forward to appear for it. This gave Rise to those of his Writings which are Controversial; wherein People of Candour and Impartiality, whether they agree with his Sentiments or no, must see a very honest Design, a Clearness in the Manner, a plain State of the Matter in Question, a Strength of Reason, and a Temper becoming a Christian and a Minister.

He was often obliged to be concerned in Matters of a publick Nature; and certainly had a Head admirably turned for Business. The Compass of his Thoughts, and the Wisdom of his Advice, would remarkably appear upon such Occasions, and was observed by many of high Rank. But in this Part of his Conduct, he was under the same Government of Religion and of a Regard to his Lord, as in all the rest; and therefore was inflexibly honest in all, and abhorred any Wisdom of the Serpent, which could not consist with the Innocency of the Dove. He would never suffer himself to come in to a Court-Trick or a politick Doubling; nor could be affrighted, or allured, into Measures contrary, to the Interest of his Country: And quickly quickly gave up an Intimacy or Friendship with the Greatest, when they ventured to make any such Attempt upon him. There is one Thing fit to be particularly remembered to his Honour: When some Messengers from the Court, in the Reign of King James II. endeavoured to bring the Dissenting Ministers of London into an Address approving the dispensing Power; in a Conference upon that Occasion, and in the Presence of the Court-Tools, Mr. Williams bravely declared, "That as it was past "Doubt, that the Severities of the former Reign upon Protestant Dissenters, "were rather as they stood in the way of "arbitrary Power, than for their religious "Dissent; so it were better for them to "be reduced to their former Hardships, "than declare for Measures destructive of "the Liberties of their Country." This he pursued with so much Clearness, that all concerned rejected the Motion, and the Emisaries went away disappointed. I will only add, That though he had frequent Occasion to stand before great Persons, yet he was far from affecting it, otherwise than as he had a Prospect of doing some Service to Religion by it.

He was a hearty Mourner for the late melancholy Aspect of our Affairs; and bore as great a Share as any Man in the Joy of His Majesty King GEORGE's peaceable Accession to the Throne of these Kingdoms.
for Dr. Williams.

Kingdoms. The Safety of his Sacred Person, the Prosperity of his Royal Family, the Peace and long Continuance of his Government, the Direction of his Counsels, and the Suppressing of his Enemies, were the Subject of his daily Prayers; as they are of all his Brethren.

His Estate was chiefly used in doing Good. He exercised a Frugality as to his own Person, possibly to an Excess; but it was with this Design, (as he expresses himself in his last Will,) that he might be the more useful to others, both in his Life, and after his Death. And accordingly, the Blessings of many who were ready to perish came upon him. Besides, that Numbers of Ministers and Students, who were in necessitous Circumstances, received frequent and liberal Exhibitions from him. And I must say from my own Observation, that though he was naturally of a very provident Temper, and might not go so far as some others upon the mere Principle of Generosity; yet where a Sense of Duty, or a Prospect of Service to any good Design called him to distribute freely, I have met with few Men more ready and furnished to good Works. They were no small Sums of Money, which he entirely lost among some, to whom he charitably lent them for their Support and Assistance in the World, upon apprehensions of their their good Character, or the hopes of promoting some useful Design thereby. And as he spent much of his Life in Benefactions, as God had prospered him; so it was plainly his Aim at his Death also, to confign the Body of his Estate to the greatest Variety of excellent Charities, for the Glory of God and the Good of Man-kind, that I remember to have met with within the Design of one Man.

Besides his watchful Care over his own Congregation, and the many other Services in the Pulpit and out of it, to which he was called in this great City; he had a very extensive Concern for the Interest of Christ in all Parts; and was ready with his Advice, or Purse, or Influence, to give his Assistance for advancing or supporting it, upon Applications even from the remotest Quarters. Not only England, but Scotland and Ireland, and the American Colonies, had a very large Share in his Concern: So that it might be applied to him, as truly as to any ordinary Minister I have known, that he bad upon him the Care of all the Churches.

Though he was a steady Nonconformist upon Principle, yet he had a charitable Temper towards the Established Church. This induced him at the Revolution to be very desirous of a Comprehension, on condition of a free Toleration to such such other Protestant Dissenters as could not be included. But the Temper shewn by the prevailing Part of Clergymen at that Time and since, made him apprehensive, that little Good was to be expected that Way: Yet he often expressed a firm Persuasion, " that God would in time bring " all sober and moderate Protestants nearer " together, and find some Way of sepa-" rating them more entirely from the " loose and the violent."

I verily believe, that He governed himself steadily, in all the Provinces he was called to, by the Dictates of his Conscience: And when that was determined, he was immoveable by any Temporal Considerations; but pursued what he thought right, with a blunt Integrity and unshaken Resolution. For it was a little Thing with him, to be judged of Man's Judgment.

This Firmness in prosecuting and going through with the many Affairs he was concerned in, without Regard to the Opinion of Men, must be expected to draw upon him many Censures, and make him some Enemies. But I must say, he had an unusual Readiness to forgive his worst Enemies. He rejoiced in their Welfare, sympathized with them in their Afflictions, willingly did good Offices for them afterwards; and seldom or never cared to speak ill of them, or to hear others do it, without important Reason. The Testimony of his own Conscience gave him sufficient Satisfaction: But however free some People made with his Reputation, he was conscientiously tender of that of others, especially of Ministers; as knowing how nice a thing a good Name is, and of what Consequence to Men's Service in the World.

That which was his own beloved Character, Simplicity and Godly Sincerity; did above all things recommend others to his Esteem; though it were found in the meanest People, or attended with very weak abilities, or discerned in those of very different Sentiments from himself: For he truly loved an honest man, in whom there was no Guile, where-ever he met him.

In such a Course of Service to his Generation and Fidelity to his Lord, having obtained help of God, he continued to a good Old Age. But now it has pleased the great Lord of Life and Death to put a Period to this valuable and useful Life; and thereby to give Occasion to many, to lament so great a Breach; especially to sorrow most of all, that we shall see his Face no more. This Congregation will enjoy no more the Instructions, the Oversight, the Prayers, of this able, experienced, and vigilant Pastor. I am bereaved of a kind and tender Father, and a most affectionate Fellow-Labourer in the Lord. His Brethren thren in the Ministry have lost an agreeable Companion, a prudent Counsellor, and an eminent Ornament and Strength: The Dissenting Interest, a zealous Friend and Supporter: And almost all the Churches, one who naturally cared for them. A Loss it is, which will be long felt; and, I doubt not, more hereafter than at present. And impartial Posterity will readily own his Merit, when all matters of Personal Difference shall be quite forgot.

This Loss is the more sensible, because it has so soon followed the Removal of two other Ministers of principal Note and Worth for Experience, Fidelity, and Prudence, the one in Scotland*, and the other in Ireland†; any one of whom would be a general Loss to an Interest at any time. Yet, (5.) This Subject furnishes us with just Grounds of Satisfaction and Support under such melancholy Providences.

As we are Christians, our great Desire is, that Christ may be pleased. It was his Will, to call his faithful Servant to receive his Reward. He had finished the Work which he gave him to do; and we are sure, the time he chose for dismissing any out of their Posts of Service here, is upon all Considerations the best; though we might apprehend, their longer Continuance would serve many excellent Purposes.

Our pious Friends or Ministers, who are dead in the Lord, are certainly well-pleased themselves; not only because their Will is entirely resolved into Christ's, but because it is in itself far better to be with him. If we could hear them speak, it would be the same Language with that of Christ to his Disciples, If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father. And since Christ and they are fully satisfied, we can have no Reason to repine. Good Men would not live here always, for they deliberately prefer the other State, and desire a better Country, that is, an Heavenly.

And when Age and Infirmities grow upon them, then especially we should not grudge them an Entrance into Rest, a Rest from their Labours; or think much that they are called to go out of the Body to their God and Redeemer and Master, when their Bodies begin to become untenantable. The Removal of our Reverend Father was agreeable to a Desire he often expressed, (and which wise and good Men in all Ages have concurred with him in,) that if it please God, he might not outlive his Usefulness. There was indeed scarce any discernible Abatement in the Capacities of his Mind: But as he had turned the Age of man, so Bodily Disorders greatly imbittered imbittered Life, and began (in a manner unusual to him) to sequester him from his beloved Work in the Pulpit. 'Twas but living (as he often expressed himself in his last short Sickness,) a dying Life. God gave him his Wish in calling him hence, before Nature sunk under greater Infirmities.

'Tis a great Relief to us that survive, that the Example of our departed Ministers still lives; and their Instructions are not all buried with them, if we are but in earnest willing to recollect and improve them. We may from both see how to please our Master; and be excited by the Circumstances of their Death to labour in our several Stations for that End. Being dead, they yet speak this. And if we learn from them how to walk and to please God, our Labour will not be in vain in the Lord, any more than theirs was. We shall meet them with Comfort, and have a Share in the blissful Approbations of the same Lord.
